A ROMAN NOTEBOOK.

THE SPIRIT OF ROME: LEAVES FROM A DIARY. By Vernon Lee. 12mo. Green cloth. Pp. 205. Gilt top. Uncut. New York: The John Lane Company. $1.50 net.

THIS little volume, made up of fragments and detached memorabilia, could hardly expect to invite serious examination or even casual interest if written by one less able than the author to recognize the phases of life, the art treasures, and even the changes of weather which go to make up the true spirit of modern Rome. The material is arranged as a series of notes of travel and of sojourn at different seasons for the last ten years. "I was brought up in Rome," Vernon Lee writes, in an "explanatory and apologetic" foreword, "from the age of 12 to that of 17, but did not return there for many years afterward. I discovered it anew for myself, while knowing all its sites and its details; discovered, that is to say, its meaning to my thoughts and feelings. And the value of these notes to those who love Rome or are capable of loving it, is that they express, in however stammering a manner, what I said to myself about Rome; or, perhaps, if the phrase is not presumptuous, what Rome, day after day and year after year, has said to me."

Vernon Lee, or, to use her own name, Violet Paget, not only knows her Rome thoroughly, but her absences from the Eternal City have given each return a new significance—therein lies the captivating sympathy and expressive impressionism of her observations. To some it may seem trivial, to some presumptuous, that she liked best of all Roman churches, the Ara Coeli; that a visit to the Colonna gallery is summed up in a single sentence on Durer's portrait of "a red-haired Colonna with the ruins of Rome behind him;" that it is much pleasanter to bicycle than to walk from Olevano to Subiaco; that Lake Nemi disappointed her; or that she swapped English seeds with the gardener at Santa Saba for some plants of border pinks. But the book is not confined to facts. It is the interpretation thereof which we find and which counts. It is not what Rome was or is, but how its people, its relics, its sunshine, and storm speak to an utterly sympathetic, impressionable, and always charming personality who sees an intimate message in all things and who would impart this message in such a manner that others may seek for and find the hidden secrets which await them:

"Only to me in these sites, impersonal and almost eternal, on these walls which have stood two thousand years and may stand two thousand more, and these hillsides and roads full of the world's legend —there appear visible, distinct, the shadows cast by my own life; the forms and faces of those changed, gone, dead ones; and my own."

Diet and Health.

The latest addition to the Temple Primers Series, published here by the Macmillan Company, is "Food in Health and Disease;" by H. Drinkwater, M. D., author of "First Aid to the Injured," &c. It has a preface by T. R. Bradshaw, B. A., M. D., F. R. C. P. The little book briefly expounds the principles of diet in health and sickness. There are chapters on animal foods, milk, vegetables, beverages, cooking, digestion of food, &c. A bibliography has been appended, as well as a note on Prof. Chittenden's "Physiological Economy in Nutrition."

HENRY HOLT AS A NOVELIST.

Opposed to Socialism, Though Anything but Anti-Social—History of a Publisher's Novels, Their Purpose and Their Literary Quality.*

BLISS CARMAN.

SOME fourteen years ago, when "Calmire" was first published, it appeared anonymously and excited a good deal of comment as to its contents and not a little speculation as to its authorship. Less than a year ago "Sturmsee" was published, also anonymously. Now they have both been transferred to a Boston publisher, appearing together with the author's name on the title page, and we learn that they are by Mr. Henry Holt.

As Mr. Holt is himself a prominent publisher, it was natural that he should wish to conceal his identity at first, in order, as he confesses in his preface, to secure unbiased criticism of his work. He secured it in divers tones, from that of The Independent, which declared his "Calmire" "far and away superior to 'Robert Elsmere,'" to that of The Springfield Republican, which declared it "heavy and dull as November." It is only fair to say, however, that the greater part of the criticism was most commendatory.

Mr. Holt writes with the manners of a gentleman of the old school. He has none of the terse effectiveness and dash so much in demand at the present day. He could never commend himself as a writer of fiction to our periodical purveyors of literary amusement. He would have to undergo a very serious operation of the blue pencil before he could do that. We are in love with a much more rapid style, and are apt to be a little impatient with such slow-moving dramas as these. To be quite frank, I confess that in going through both books in succession I did find "Calmire" a considerable task. I am not sure that it would have seemed so had I read it when it first appeared. The theological problems with which it deals were more in the air then than now, and that may be the reason that their lengthy discussion fell on unwilling ears. With "Sturmsee" the case is somewhat different. It investigates the problems of labor and capital, which are so forcibly occupying our attention just now, and holds us by reason of that interest. It deals with the whole Socialistic situation, (or one had better say with the relation of the human workman to modern conditions,) with a patient thoroughness and a rare clearness of reason which make very lucid if somewhat voluminous reading.

IN regard to this point of style, the great diffusiveness which Mr. Holt has allowed himself in his work, he says in his preface to this edition that he never dared to hope that it would be other than tedious to a vast majority of readers. I cannot help feeling, however, that it is a pity he has been quite so deliberately prolix. In "Sturmsee" at least he has admirable matter under his hand, a good story, and a living problem. A little greater effort of condensation would have given us a book that might be expected to go through the country like wildfire. However, we must be glad of what we have; and for the more leisurely reader, for the man or woman who has a real interest in ideas, and not a mere lust for idle excitement, "Sturmsee" will make a valuable return. It is a more interesting story than the earlier book; has more diversity of scene and a greater number of memorable characters.

Of course, such a book opens anew the whole discussion of the question of didactic novels, and, coming out just at this time, almost compels comparison with Mr. Upton Sinclair's masterly realistic study, "The Jungle." Mr. Sinclair belongs to the latest rank of recruits in fiction. It is natural that he should write with more vividness than deliberation. His method is entirely different from Mr. Holt's. "The Jungle" is not distinctly a plea for Socialism, much less a presentation of it. A terrible piece of realism, it is in effect a revelation of the horrors of our present system of industrialism at its worst, and an arraignment of twentieth century civilization at the bar of human justice. It presents us with the awful spectacle of sufferings for which modern conditions are responsible. It brings home the question clearly enough, and unless we can do something about it, we are all incriminated together. But what to do? Mr. Sinclair really offers no solution. True, he is himself a Socialist, and toward the close of his book makes his heart-broken character find refuge and help only among the Socialists; but his work is rather a mighty plea for the helpless victims of inordinate greed than an exposition of the practical working of Socialism. He extols Socialism as a panacea for our extreme afflictions, but he does not evolve his story under its operation. Mr. Holt's method is different. In the first place, he is not the realist that Mr. Sinclair is. It is not his prime object to indict society for its inhuman crimes. He takes it for granted that we have all felt the severity of the law of life and have rebelled at its seeming injustice. The main theme of his book, or at least its main effect, is to point out the inevitableness of human inequality, and consequently the inevitableness of inequality in wealth and happiness.

THIS is done in two ways. In the first place, in tracing the life of one of the leading characters, Philson, a self-made manufacturer, and an excellent type of reliant American, it clearly appears that his moneymaking is almost unavoidable. In managing his business he is just and fair, and even generous; he takes advantage of no one; he simply uses his opportunity with a shrewd knowledge and exceptional judgment of men and affairs. Because he knows when and where to buy and sell, what to make, and how to make it, he is a capable leader for his men, as well as an efficient manager. The increase of his business is due to his own efforts and his own ability entirely, and the increase of his wealth follows inevitably. He cannot help growing rich.

It is made equally clear that a co-operative business, without an efficient manager, is destined to failure. We are given a fair example of the experiment and the futility of the result, in the establishment of a tin factory by a number of workmen, who each contribute a certain amount of capital, but have little or no business ability. Naturally, their undertaking turns out disastrously, and again it becomes quite evident that wealth which is made in manufactures is not created by the workmen, but by the man who is capable of organizing and handling the workmen, and has a distinct ability for conducting their combined efforts as a single business. When the experiment is breaking down, a man who has been much interested in it and has advanced money to carry it on, declares to one of the workmen that he is cured.

"Of the notion that there may be some way of making men's fortunes equal, or that they ought to be equal. There are fifty men over there, owning a pile of stuff that they can't eat or wear or burn—and although they had sense enough to make it, the whole business is absolutely useless to them unless somebody is at hand to tell them what to make, and to sell it after it is made. Mechanics can work till the crack of doom, and own all they make; and without the market prophet and the market finder and the market filler they might as well, with all their product, be in the middle of the ocean, without food or drinking water."

And in another place the successful manufacturer declares: "Men can't get along without a boss, unless they're fit to be bosses themselves; and men who are fit to be bosses are not going to stay at anything else a great while. No more sense in a lot of mechanics going into the tin business than in a lot of sheep going into the wool business—at least not much more. That's the trouble with co-operation."

At the conclusion of the story is a succinct "Body of Social Doctrine" set down by one character as his final opinion on the vexed question, and it may doubtless be taken for the author's own. It sums up the trend and gist of his work. A few of the brief paragraphs may be reproduced:

> The elements of happiness and civilization—from food and shelter up—are the product of mind. Hands count only as the instruments of mind.
> For the highest productiveness the inferior mind must be guided by the superior, and in friendly and sympathetic co-operation.
> Nature's effort is to distribute the product in proportion to the minds producing it.
> The only wise hope of the inferior mind is in increase of its power of production. The increase depends not only upon its own efforts, but also upon the educating help of the higher mind and its products, including good government.

SUCH doctrines are the opposite of Socialistic, as Socialism is commonly understood. But they indicate Mr. Holt's philosophy, and are not to be set aside by a single puff of indignation. It is nothing against Socialism to say that it is a premature dream of impossible good. No good is impossible, and every good must be a dream before it can become a fact. But if it is irrational and likely to prove futile after all; that certainly is against it. It is born of an outraged sense of wrong, our sympathy with the lot of hapless toiling men and women. But sympathy alone is not fit to rule the world without sound judgment and cool reason. Where should we be if the sentimentalists had things all their own way? So far as the sentiment which is at the core of the Socialistic movement goes, it is an ideal worthy of all honor, for that sentiment is simply the love of our fellows. But we must ask much more of Socialism than that. That is its religion, its faith; but what is its plan of procedure, and what are to be its ultimate as well as its immediate results? Its immediate aim is to relieve the incompetent and enrich the inferior. But what will its ultimate effect be upon the race? In so far as it takes away incentives to personal effort, it will destroy the mainspring of life. How is that to be avoided? And how is humanity to be bettered in the long run by encouraging the thriftless, preserving the unfit, and depriving superior and exceptional individuals of any exceptional reward?

These are questions which must be answered sooner or later, if not in our own day. It is not enough that they should be answered offhand. They are as old as life, and need the best thought of the world. It is hardly to be supposed that any solution of the social dilemma will be found by sentimental considerations, however generous. It is not a question that can be settled by indignant sympathy alone. It requires cold logic as well.

Mr. Holt is one of those who incline to a wise and patient modification of present conditions, rather than a radical overturning of them. He sees clearly, what so many zealous reformers forget, that time is a factor in growth, and that nature is not revolutionary but evolutionary. He would maintain that slow but sure natural process of development, by means of selection. If the unhappy plight of those who are ill-fitted to survive in the struggle for existence can be mitigated at all, it can only be through a sense of generous responsibility in those who are well fitted.

> It isn't the present state of the upper man that has brought about the present state of things. It is the imperfect development of the lower man.
> The topheavy fortunes that are accumulating among us are absurdities and wastes; but there's no good way to get rid of them but through increased philanthropy and indifference to superfluities, and no way to prevent them but by increasing the average man's capacity to produce a share of them, and by slow experiments in improving the laws.

SUCH a point of view will of course commend itself to the average man who likes his comfort and his sense of security in an established order of things. But Mr. Holt must have credit for something more than mere conservatism. He has not that headlong enthusiasm, that holy ire, which possesses our Socialistic friends and so often carries them away beyond the bounds

MR. NATHAN GALLIZIER'S

CASTEL DEL MONTE

(Six Illustrations by H. C. Edwards. $1.50.)

One of the Most Important Historical Romances in Years.

The Liverpool Post Says:

"'Castel del Monte' is one of the best romances among recent books, and beyond that, it gives an illuminating story of the manner and machinations of times conspicuous even in Italian history for plot and counterplot."

The Dundee (Scotland) Courier Writes:

"Full of stirring incident from first to last, this novel, like the writings of Sir Walter Scott, is founded on history, and in the treatment of the personages strongly resembles Bulwer-Lytton in his 'Last Days of Pompeii.' In character delineation and fine descriptive writing the author will compare very favorably indeed with either of the above, and it may be safely predicted that this book will prove one of the hits of the book season."

The Aberdeen (Scotland) Free Press Says:

"The author conducts us through the subtle convulotions of the plot with great skill. There are some pretty descriptions of the charming scenery in Sicily and quite a welter of gorgeous colors in the pageants of the royal court, with its crowds of gayly clad princes and knights and Saracens and abbots and monks."

The Liverpool Courier Writes:

"Any attempt to recreate mediaeval history as the basis of a historical romance challenges comparison with some of the giants of literature. It is no slight tribute to Mr. Gallizier to say that he emerges creditably from the ordeal. He has happily contrived to evade the pitfall of dullness into which historical novelists are apt to fall, and has clothed in the garb of the Middle Ages a thrilling story of love and intrigue, and turned to weird, dramatic account, the commonly accepted belief in witchcraft and magic."

of temperate judgment. He keeps a cool head in discussion, and yet his work is actuated by a desire for human betterment quite as strong as the stoutest radical's, and he writes, moreover, with mature experience. The reformers, after all, haven't a monopoly of human kindness any more than the conservatives have a monopoly of common sense. We require for the solution of our great problem, indeed, all the warmth of heart of the most uncompromising enthusiast and all the steadiness of thought of the most dispassionate philosopher. Even so we shall reach our solution slowly and painfully enough. It is not at all certain that Socialism in its extreme form would be the great cure-all that many imagine, although many Socialistic institutions, like free schools and free libraries, are undoubted benefits. It would seem the part of practical wisdom, therefore, to apply ourselves year by year to the most crying wrongs and difficulties as they arise; to use theoretical and scientific wisdom, but to use it tentatively and gradually, since all nature is tentative, gradual, and experimental.

The question—the conflict between capital and labor—is not one of practical government alone. It involves more profound and elemental rights and wrongs, and that is what makes it so irritating and so difficult. These deeper ethical perplexities Mr. Holt sees plainly enough when he allows one of his characters to say:

> You're merely confusing two rights—nature's right and the ideal right—and this is not an ideal world. The natural right is that every man should have what he produces, but the ideal right is that every man should have enough, and most men can't produce enough to satisfy them.

His solution of the difficulty depends not so much on recasting our institutions as on recasting the tenor of our lives, on ennobling our spirit and making our endeavors more and more unselfish. That is the great merit of the book; for there we are on solid ground and have a certain good, toward the attainment of which we may bend our energies. However heated and perplexed we may grow in argument over the relative excellence of different kinds of civic government, there is always the task of governing ourselves, to which each of us may turn with a very fair prospect of being thoroughly cooled and sufficiently occupied.

COINCIDENCE.

THE TRIUMPHS OF EUGENE VALMONT. By Robert Barr. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

THE adventures of Eugene Valmont are the adventures of an arch detective and, as one would expect of such, full of various and sundry matters. He quotes the "long arm of coincidence" as a too common method in fiction, and then proceeds to relate some very startling instances of coincidence.

That of the "sad Sophia Brooks" and the new Lord Reutremly coming to his office within a week of each other leads to a thrilling mystery with a handsome old historic castle for a background and a club-footed ghost for the centre of interest.

The amazing title of one of Monsieur's adventures, "Oh, My Prophetic Soul, My Uncle," refers to a good enough young chap who has just fallen heir to a title and a dilapidated estate, with no hope of improving it unless he can discover how to profit by that eccentric uncle's mystifying instructions to find his fortune between two sheets of paper.

The story of how the famous diamond necklace brought ill fate to every one connected with it from Marie Antoinette down is capitally told and helps to explain why Valmont lost his place as chief of detectives in Paris.

"A man should present the whole truth to his doctor, his lawyer, or his detective," was a belief of this ingenious man. Lady Alicia, however, did not look upon the matter in the same light. There is a pretty little romance mixed up with her tale, and when the stolen emeralds are at length disclosed upon her own fair neck we feel that no matter what the Scotland Yarders would say Monsieur's failure to work out his case in the orthodox way is, in this particular instance, in the nature of a triumph.

The Bride's Primer.

A valuable book to those recently married or intending to get married, "The Bride's Primer," (Phelps Publishing Company,) is the product of three minds—almost as many as are needed to make a modern "musical comedy" with a "girl" in it. Mr. Thornton Burgess composed the primer; Mr. F. Strothmann provided the illustrations, and Mr. Tom Masson wound the book up with an "essay on brides." All have played their parts ably. Mr. Thornton has told and Mr. Strothmann has shown what the bride is apt to do, and have given her advice on how not to do it again; and in his paper Mr. Masson points that jelly is best molded while it is warm, and suggests to the bride to mold her husband while he is still in that condition. Good advice, all; may the bride only take it!

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

UNDER THE ARCH. By Lady Henry Somerset. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S novel will attract attention not merely because of the personality of the author, but also because it is an absorbing narrative, throbbing with the life of today.

Not, to be sure, that it strikes out any new truths or working theories. The reader will be disappointed who thinks to find in it any quick solution of sociological problems, or even any temperance tract, as might have been feared by some others. Lady Henry Somerset is far too broad-minded to offer a ready-made panacea for the evils she has studied, nor can we think that she has written this novel dealing with the contrasts between wealth and poverty merely because the Society-versus-Slum novel is The Thing. At first glance we may wonder why she chose to explain her title with those lines from Rossetti:

Under the arch of life, where love and death,
Terror and mystery, guard her shrine, I saw Beauty enthroned.

The awakening of the soul of a butterfly in the case of Lady Cliffe, through intense suffering, results in development of a beauty of character that is not tangible and is hardly to be expressed. The beauty which Elizabeth and Michael find is the beauty of homely affection that radiates to all less fortunate people with whom they come in contact.

The Socialist Michael's character is epitomized in his casual remark that "it is not the suffering of good people that will help humanity, but their honest work to bring about just conditions for every one;" Elizabeth's in Father Martin's opinion that she will find happiness when she finds some one to love and take care of.

Of the minor characters, Father Martin's is perhaps the most comforting. He it is who always knows how to soothe the troubled hearts that come to him for advice. He it is who lays stress on the atmosphere of each individual, the inner attitude of every one toward good and evil, as all that actually counts.

But the book is not altogether serious and sermonizing. There are delightfully humorous parts, such as Lady Cliffe's description of the Simple Life of modern Mayfair.

> "I dined out last night," says she, "and five out of every twenty people were simple-fooders, ate no meat, and wanted all sorts of things no one ever heard of. It's the most complicated life there is, but it's absolutely the rage."

Her own interviews with the new art decorator and her giving up of numberless comforts for the sake of aesthetic consistency are vastly entertaining. Anne Rodney, who is always making pithy and disparaging observations of her fashionable set; Lady Augusta's desire to combine Philanthropy (with a capital P) with "social success," and Mr. Farningham, whose greatest pleasure in life consists in hanging upon some dowager's words, are all natural and amusing.

Eric, too, of the artistic temperament and the utter lack of any real perception, would be a humorous object if we could but forget our pity for those he meets and for the fate of the American girl he eventually wins.

When the end of the book is reached we feel that Lady Henry Somerset has here set forth, under fictitious, but always interesting, characters, much of her own rich and varied experience with human nature, and not a little of her belief that under that arch where the "terror and mystery" are so pitifully apparent there are yet glimpses to be had of truth and beauty. Since faith would not be faith if we could know, she would have us accept the glimpses with gratitude, and let the sight of "beauty enthroned" make for joy.

New Set of School Readers.

The Language Reader Series is a new set of readers for the first six years in school compiled by Prof. Franklin T. Baker of Teachers College, Prof. George R. Carpenter of Columbia University, and Miss Jennie F. Owens of the Jersey City Training School. The object of the Series is to bring language and reading into close relationship. Each book has some dominating interest in its subject-matter. The first two books contain simple stories and poems of folk lore and child life. The Third Year Reader has for its dominant element the fairy and folk tale. The Fourth book is given over to animal stories and tales of adventure. The great myths of the world are included in the Fifth Reader. And there is a selection of stories, poems, and essays, serving as an introduction to general literature, in the sixth year volume. Each volume is well and profusely illustrated. The Macmillan Company publishes the Series.

KARL GRIER
By LOUIS TRACY
Author of "The Wings of the Morning,"

By GORDON HOLMES
Author of "A Mysterious Disappearance."

Good When Published; Good
Now; and Good for a Long Time to Come.

In "Karl Grier" Louis Tracy has created a new vehicle of thought—of expression which is dazzling in its clever daring. Karl Grier possesses a sixth sense. You feel the tension at which this man lives. He is no bloodless dreamer. Grier is an athletic Oxford man who loves and hates,—who does things. Your imagination will be stimulated by this sense of knowing afar,—Tracy calls it "telegnomy"—embodied in a romance told as only Tracy can.

In "The Arncliffe Puzzle" Gordon Holmes has told a story of mystery and love exceeding in interest even "A Mysterious Disappearance," for which critics pronounced him master story-teller.

"The Arncliffe Puzzle" is a novel of absorbing interest. A great story so well told that either as a story of mystery or a tale of love it is a masterpiece of entertainment.

SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS

LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, APRIL 7, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THE recovery of the body of the naval hero, Paul Jones, 113 years after its burial in an obliterated and forgotten Protestant cemetery in the heart of Paris, was one of the most remarkable achievements history has recorded. Gen. Horace Porter, then the United States Ambassador in France, conceived the idea of recovering the body, planned and directed the series of investigations which led to the discovery of the place of burial, and personally directed all the succeeding work which, after six years of battling with all sorts of discouragements, led to the recovery and positive identification of the body. The story of this achievement, as Gen. Porter himself has modestly told it, first in The Century Magazine, and now in a supplementary chapter to a new edition, in two volumes, of the late A. C. Buell's "Paul Jones, Founder of the American Navy," has the absorbing interest of a tale of mystery by Poe. In the beginning even the date of death was uncertain, and there was no serviceable information at hand as to the place of burial. A Protestant by religion, Paul Jones died in Catholic France, at a time when Protestantism perforce avoided every sort of public display, and at a time, also, of a great political upheaval, when all Paris was in a state of excitement. Moreover, the certificate of his burial had been destroyed, with many other documents, when the Hotel de Ville was burned by the Commune of 1871. Step by step Gen. Porter overcame every difficulty, and accomplished his self-appointed task. The body of the hero now lies at Annapolis. The renewed interest in the career of Paul Jones, one of the greatest naval commanders who ever lived, if not, indeed, the greatest, caused by the published accounts of Gen. Porter's recovery of his body and its transference to this country, has made this new edition of Buell's Life necessary.

THE new "Commemoration Edition" of Mr. Buell's book is an admirable example of modern bookmaking. The type is handsome, the paper and printing of the best quality. The text has been carefully revised and the typographical errors, and a few others, of the first edition, printed six years ago, have been expunged. Besides the supplementary chapter by Gen. Porter, and the illustrations and documents accompanying it, there are a good index, and an appendix containing an account of the various portraits of Paul Jones, the rosters of the Ranger, the Bonhomme Richard, and the Serapis, a bibliography, and other interesting matter. As a writer Mr. Buell produced nothing else nearly so good as his Life of Paul Jones. His sympathies were wholly with his subject, and he worked untiringly over the records to obtain the facts which he set forth so eloquently. His book is quite good enough to deserve its splendid new setting. The encounter of the Bonhomme Richard and the Serapis is accounted by students of naval history one of the most memorable of naval battles. Some declare Paul Jones's victory to be the greatest in naval history. Mr. Buell's account of this battle is both graphic and accurate.

THREE new volumes in the Harper's Young People series contain Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," "Through the Looking Glass," and "The Hunting of the Snark and Other Poems," all illustrated by Peter Newell. The miscellaneous verses in the last-mentioned volume include, of course, the immortal nonsense rhymes of the two other books. We have had occasion, hitherto, to commend Mr. Newell's pictures illustrating the droll fancies of Lewis Carroll. They are well worth the notice of mature folks whose childhood was illumined by Carroll's humorous imagination. Tenniel's pictures will always have the first place, of course, but many of Newell's are certainly not inferior in aptness and sympathy to those of the first illustrator of these delightful books. He exactly catches, for instance, the characteristics of the walrus and the carpenter. They could not be pictured better. Perhaps his genius scarcely rises to the bandersnatch, to depict which so as to satisfy every one who reads about that wonderful creature would require extraordinary imaginative power. But what could be better than his drawings of Alice emerging on the wrong side of the looking glass, and of Alice "opening out like the largest telescope that ever was"? Tastes must always differ, of course, and all who like Lewis Carroll may not like Peter Newell. His is an odd genius, and sometimes a trifle gruesome. We have heard of one child, brought up on Tenniel, who positively declined to accept Newell's pictures. But probably most youngsters will find them delightful.

HERBERT GEORGE WELLS, the romancer and sociologist, better known to the multitude as plain "H. G.," sailed for America last Saturday. He comes, we are told, to "study social phenomena," so we are to receive him, probably, with the gravity due to the author of "Anticipations," "Mankind in the Making," and "A Modern Utopia," rather than with a manifestation of the downright joy his humorous tales have given us, or the admiration born of his tales of wonder. Some of us prefer the Wells of "The Time Machine" and "Kipps" to the Wells of "Mankind in the Making." But however we may take him, he is a man of well-deserved fame, a young man of forty who has made his generation sit up in amazement. He calls himself an optimist. Some folks discern in him a dangerous pessimist and destroyer of time-honored ideals. To us he is one of the most gifted story-tellers of his age.

ONE cannot help smiling at the fuss made over a new romance by Mr. William Le Queux, author of many romances, entitled "The Invasion of 1910." This is only another of the alarmist tales which have often had vogue among novel readers, but have been lately confined chiefly to Germany. Mr. R. C. Lehmann, who has written a novel himself, and done many other things worth doing, is now a member of Parliament, asked a question in the House of Commons concerning the new book, no doubt with the idea that the Government should frown upon books tending needlessly to promote international ill-feeling and to stir up warlike feeling. It appears that the book contains certain statements which measurably justified Mr. Lehmann's question in Parliament, but, of course, no result can come of such an action, except a great increase in the sales of the book.

Trees and Shrubs of Prospect Park.

Mrs. Louis Herman Peet of Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, announces that she has now ready an illustrated edition of her husband's book, "Trees and Shrubs of Prospect Park," which was so cordially received upon its publication last year.

VICTORIAN CRITICISM.

BY MONTGOMERY SCHUYLER.

MISS ELIZABETH M. ROSCOE has done a good work in collecting, under the title of "Brief Literary Criticisms," the most noteworthy of the literary essays wherewith her uncle, Richard Holt Hutton, made the literary reputation of The London Spectator, and maintained it for a full generation from 1861, when he became associated with Mr. Meredith Townsend in the editorship, until not long before his death in 1897. The Macmillan Company has excellently seconded, as publisher, her pious undertaking by putting the collection in a handsome, handy, and legible volume, a "format" already endeared to most of the readers whom it is likely to attract as that of the essays of Matthew Arnold. As a piece of bookmaking, there is no cavil to be made with the volume. As a piece of editing, a query at once presents itself whether the editor was justified in changing the editorial plural of the original publication to the first person singular. We are inclined to think not. Intensely personal, of course, Hutton's work was, and not often mistakable, though some of his juniors may at times have successfully "caught his accent." But they were editorial opinions all the same, written under a different kind of responsibility from that of signed articles, and under rigid limitations of space. These conditions are obscured and a corresponding injustice is done to the articles by the change in the form.

MR. HUTTON'S eminence as a literary journalist is beyond dispute, and he was very little more. Two or three memoirs and the volume on "Scott" in Morley's "English Men of Letters" are all that one recalls of his work outside the columns of his newspaper. But in those columns he so wrought that he managed to bring The Spectator up into a rivalry with The Saturday Review when The Saturday was at the height of its ability and influence. One may say that some counterpoise to The Saturday was needed to vindicate the British people. For in spite of the erudition and the acumen The Saturday showed, and the authority with which on so many subjects it spoke, its habitual attitude was that of the "languid Oxford man": "There's nothing new and nothing true, and it doesn't matter." The general incredulity which was in its prime the chief defect of The Saturday's qualities survived them until at the time of its nadir it may be said to have constituted those qualities, and as at last there was nothing left of the Cheshire cat in "Alice in Wonderland" but the grin, so The Saturday seemed to consist exclusively of sneer. To this expression of denial came The Spectator, under Townsend and Hutton, as the counterparting expression of belief. The defect of this quality was also grave. The general trustfulness of The Spectator was such that it might be said that it would believe anything, and some wonderful mare's nests it did undoubtedly discover. Most of these discoveries, perhaps, were made in the political field, which was the other partner's province. But a good many of them, one has to own, were Mr. Hutton's finds in literature. It was on account of them, doubtless, that his lifelong friend, Walter Bagehot, chaffingly told him, as he sets forth in his memoir, that he, Bagehot, never ventured upon The Spectator on Saturday morning, but employed his wife to "break it to him." There are not wanting in this volume some discoveries in equine nidification. The chief is perhaps the discovery, to which he often recurs, that Scott is "perhaps second in the long roll of British literature." Both Scott's verse and his prose Mr. Hutton seems to overrate. But he does not mispraise him except by overpraising him. He is never weary of quoting, and variously misquoting.

> Sound, sound the clarion, fill the fife—which is, in fact, Scott's keynote. He calls our attention to the "lifelike background" before Stevenson had formulated the "consciousness of the background" as the distinction of romantic from classic art, and he says of the novels, very justly: "They fill you with the sense of the greatness and complexity of the world." He overrates also Cardinal Newman's poetical work. On the other hand, he is just to Longfellow, which seems to be a very difficult attainment; he was very early just, if not more than just, to Matthew Arnold as a poet, and he early vindicated Clough.

BUT it is not by reason of a justice which imposes itself as authoritative that these essays are worth reading. It is by their frequent acuteness, and their unfailing sympathy and candor. They give you much more the wish to have known the writer than many essayists impart who may come much nearer to a final laying down of the law. Necessarily, they deal with one aspect at a time of the writers they discuss. You cannot exhaust anything within the Procrustean limit of 3,000 words. You may, indeed, recur to another aspect in another article, and build up in that way a fairly complete image. This Mr. Hutton did with many of his subjects, and Miss Roscoe has promoted his purpose by grouping the articles which relate to different aspects of the same subject. It might be wished that she had dated all the articles, as she has done with only a very few. One cannot say that the volume contains anything like a body of critical doctrine. But one can say that it contains a great deal of stimulating and suggestive discourse. Probably it is safe to say that it is better reading than would be a like collection of the work of any other literary journalist of the Victorian time, done under the like condition. The readers to whom it appeals are very much obliged to the editor and the publisher for making the collection.

Ernest Poole.

The author of "The Voice of the Street," the new novel to be published by A. S. Barnes & Co. May 1, has had many adventures since his graduation from Princeton four years ago. He spent three years in the University Settlement studying east side child life, which he described for magazine readers, the sweat shops of the Ghetto, tenement life, &c. Then he went, as correspondent for several magazines, to the big Chicago meat strike. After this he sailed to Russia, traveling with an interpreter all over the Czar's Empire. He returned to New York last October, and his impressions of the city are told in his present story. It deals with the life of a great singer born in the tenements of New York, his love of gambling, &c., with descriptions of east side scenes, tragedies, and so forth.

Haldane Macfall's "Irving."

Another biography of Sir Henry Irving is about to be published here. It will bear the imprint of John W. Luce & Co. of Boston, and is from the pen of the well-known art critic and exhibitor of London, Hal Dane, author of "Whistler," "The House of the Sorcerer," ("The Wooings of Jezebel Pettyfer,") "The Masterfolk," &c., who in private life is Haldane Macfall. The volume is dedicated to "Ellen Terry, who by her genius added to the lustre of her great comrade's magnificence." Mr. Macfall presents a sympathetic review of the life of the celebrated actor, embracing "The Man," "His Career," "His Art." The numerous illustrations include pictures by Gordon Craig, (the son of Ellen Terry,) Histed, Robert Bath, and others, showing Irving in all his characters. The volume will appear April 10.

"Municipal Ownership in England."

This is the second of the series by Prof. Hugo Richard Meyer, which presents the results of his investigation into the actual working of the railway, the telegraph, street railway, electric light, electric power plant, and the telephone. The first book dealt with the United States—"Government Regulation of Railway Rates"—and the volumes to record Prof. Meyer's studies in Germany and Australia will shortly follow the present one on British conditions. The book deals with the Tramways act of 1870, the Light Railways act of 1896, the lack of street railways in the United Kingdom, the conditions in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greater London, and other cities, the Electric Lighting act of 1882, politics and wages, &c.

More Stevenson Letters.

A new volume of Stevenson letters is in preparation by Charles Scribner's Sons. It is entitled "Letters from Samoa," and will be a companion volume to "From the Marquesas and Beyond," by the same author, Mrs. Margaret Isabelle Stevenson. The epistles were written during her journey to Samoa, and while she was living there with her son, "R. L. S.," until her return after his death. Besides the account of the life of the Stevensons in Samoa, the author also includes descriptions of the islands and people. The book will be profusely illustrated.

THE MENTOR OF BOWDOIN.

BY EDWARD CARY.

DR. HYDE, President of Bowdoin College, in his latest volume, "The College Man and the College Woman," sums up in a way his labors as guide, philosopher, and friend to the boys and girls in college. Incidentally he has a good deal to say to the fathers and mothers who have or may have boys and girls in some of the multiform institutions that pass by the name of college, or by a much more ambitious and generally less fitting one. Dr. Hyde is exceptionally fitted for his task. For one thing, he began it very early. He was but 27 when he became President of Bowdoin, and that important post he has held a little more than twenty years. He has still the vigor, the spring—what some of his boys would call the "nerve"—of relative youth, and he must have been pretty successful or these qualities would not have survived the repression and attrition of two decades of work and struggle, for, unquestionably, there is plenty of struggle of one sort or another in the life of a live college President. In the next place, Dr. Hyde has, in an excellent sense, the didactic impulse and call. I shall not be misunderstood as meaning by this that he is "preachy," for his passion for teaching is preceded, balanced, and disciplined by the instinct and habit of study and of thinking. Not the study of books alone—apparently he is not deficient in that—but of human nature as he meets it and of society as he takes his part in it. Especially he has a fondness for and a rare knack at turning a subject around and up-side-down in his mind and inspecting it from various sides, some of them quaint and, occasionally, slightly audacious. Finally, Dr. Hyde has broad and generous sympathies. He is by no means calculatingly catholic, avoiding prejudice by evading pronounced feeling. His native tendency is, one would say, toward pretty definite opinion and sentiment and pretty emphatic sentiment. But his endowment of sympathy enables him also to see the view of one from whom he differs, or even one whose opinion or conduct he finds it necessary to condemn. Obviously, this is a considerable asset for a teacher, especially for a teacher and preacher of morals, which, distinctly, Dr. Hyde is.

PERHAPS the most important, the dominating quality, revealed by Dr. Hyde's volume is a very sincere, a deep seated, an efficient desire to be right. I am not sure that this is the unfailing characteristic of the moralist. Very respectable and even influential moralists have written innumerable pages without betraying it. Not that they have not a deep affection for the right as they see it, and men have brought about much good by the consistent advocacy of their own notion of what is right, even when that notion has not stood the test of time and of the searching experience time brings, and when, perhaps, the intensity of devotion to the notion was an effect of the sense of property in it. "A poor thing, but my own," is a motto that will serve for many a preacher of this temper, save for its modesty which such preachers do not feel. Decidedly Dr. Hyde is not of this type, but of one quite opposite. He shows what he really is in his essay—probably it was some sort of sermon, when originally thought out—on "Greek qualities in a college man," which is an effort to apply to the conditions of modern life the essential Greek ideals and to harmonize them with the Christian ideals. That, it will be seen, is a risky undertaking. It would be easy to twist and warp the Greek or the Christian conception, practically to destroy the one or the other, by an attempt at forced conciliation. Dr. Hyde escapes this danger. It would not be practical even in the most summary manner to indicate here how he avoids it. But I think he does, and the feat is at once remarkable and of value. It is no slight thing that young men, on the one hand stirred by the beauty and loftiness of Greek thought and its expression, and on the other incited to accept an interpretation of Christianity which, on its face, is contradictory to most of what the great Greeks thought and expressed, should be shown that under real Greek and real Christian ideals lies the unceasing force of evolution, determining their relations to each other and to the scheme of human life. Throughout Dr. Hyde's volume he makes it plain that everything in the conduct of life which the Christian standard requires is to him absolutely worth while quite apart from that standard, from the obligation it imposes or the sanction it offers. And he makes that view seem rational and winning. It is no small achievement. In point of difficulty and in point of influence on the minds to which his present book and his professional work are alike directed, it is a very considerable achievement.

DR. HYDE'S book is uneven. Its parts are not well woven together. They are somewhat disparate, though not contradictory. It might have been better in some respects—in respect to his own reputation as a writer and as a leader, for instance—had he taken the time and the pains to work the matter out in a more harmonious form, and, if one may say so, a form of greater dignity. But this could not have been done without losing somewhat an influence which the book is apt to exert, and which it would be a pity to lessen. The various chapters, or most of them, bear the mark of their origin in the steadfast purpose of the writer's daily calling. They are struck out and hammered, conceived and shaped, amid the life their author lives, as well as discusses, and they go warm from his mind to the minds of his readers as they seem to have gone to the minds of his hearers. To this he has necessarily sacrificed something also of literary form. Perhaps not so much as the critic might surmise. Perhaps literary form is not so precious to him as certain passages suggest, and these passages may have been happy accidents. "Take care of the sense," says the Duchess to Alice in "Wonderland," "and the sounds will take care of themselves." That immortal rule of literary economy may really be the one Dr. Hyde instinctively respects. In his case, on the whole, it works very well.

BOOKS THAT HAVE SAP IN THEM

We've just put through another printing of Miss Glasgow's notable novel, "The Wheel of Life"—the "best selling book in the United States." A publisher with any pride in his profession could hardly have greater satisfaction than at finding there is so large a public for such an admirable piece of literary work. ($1.50.)

"The Jungle," by Upton Sinclair, is making a real sensation in Chicago, where the scenes are laid, and everywhere else. Thirtieth thousand now in press, though the book appeared only Feb. 26th.

The Chicago Journal says: "This is a novel of great tragic power . . . written out of the heart of a man."

The San Francisco Examiner: "If you read no other book this year, read 'The Jungle.' It is a great, a wonderful story."

The Louisville Times: "There is no power on earth that can prevent its being read."

LONDON BOOK NEWS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, April 6.—Bertram Dobell proposes to publish by subscription a series of unknown and unedited works of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. One of these works is Traherne's "Centuries of Meditation." Another is the same author's "Christian Ethicks." Mr. Dobell will also publish three or four volumes of gleanings from manuscripts of the same period, the works of writers unknown to literary history, and unknown works of famous authors.

The Cambridge University Press having practically completed its modern history, has arranged for a mediaeval history in eight volumes. The work has been planned by Prof. Bury.

The fourth and last volume of Andrew Lang's "History of Scotland" will be published early this Summer by the Blackwoods.

Fisher Unwin will publish next week an English translation of Paul Sabatier's "Disestablishment in France," in which the author deals with the causes of the separation of Church and State and the probable effects of the action on French Catholicism.

Macmillan & Co. will publish this month Henry Sturth's "Idola Theatri," a criticism of Oxford thought and thinkers from the standpoint of personal idealism. The idols the author attacks are certain alleged mistaken tendencies of contemporary thought, which he calls intellectualism, absolutism, and subjectism, and which he holds have come into British thought mainly through Hegel, and he traces their operation in several leading Oxford thinkers.

Miss Dougall, author of "The Zeitgeist," has finished another story, "The Spanish Dowry," which Messrs. Hutchinson will publish.

W.

The Nibelungen Ring Again.

G. P. Putnam's Sons will shortly publish "The Ethics of Wagner's Ring of the Nibelungen," by Mary Elizabeth Lewis. This is a study of the ideals of conduct set forth by the celebrated composer in his lyrical dramas.

THE SPOILERS

By Rex E. Beach

This is a story written by a strong man, of a strong man, for strong and grown up men to read. It is a tale such as is told by a man perhaps once in a lifetime—a tale of impetuous emotion, of brute strength and courage, of swift and passionate love and hate—a tale which tells itself without fine words—vigorous, forceful, mighty. There is no room for the violet conventions of society in that robust land where

"Never a law of God or Man runs north of Fifty-three."

The only law is the law of possession, of individual conscience, and of hunger—the hunger for gold digged out of the hills, and the blinding hunger of man for woman and for woman's love. It is a story of to-day, but it goes back to the root of things, and is true of all men and all real women since time began.

SOME NEW EDITIONS OF OLD PLAYS.

BRANDER MATTHEWS,

Professor of Dramatic Literature in Columbia University.

IN Mr. Andrew Lang's recent cordial appreciation of Sir Walter Scott he goes out of his way to deplore the fact that nowadays gentlemen no longer "form libraries" and that nobody reads anything to-day but the very latest novel, and he shows how Scott may be held partly responsible for both of these literary calamities. But what warrant has Mr. Lang for either of these assumptions? No doubt there has been a change in the likings and in the customs of the book-buying public, and things in the beginning of the twentieth century are not quite what they were at the beginning of the nineteenth. Perhaps it is a fact that gentlemen no longer "form libraries"—but who is it then who buys the many seemly tomes of the full sets of standard authors, poets and historians and novelists, which the publishers are incessantly putting forth in London and in New York? Perhaps it is true that nobody reads anything now except the "six best sellers of the month"; but, then, who are the purchasers of the millions of volumes of inexpensive reprints of the best writers, ancient and modern, which have been scattered broadcast in Great Britain and in the United States in the past ten years?

On closer inspection of the actual facts it seems as though Mr. Lang had unduly narrowed his view. Here in America, at any rate, there are still gentlemen who "form libraries," even if that special phrase has lost currency. And there are also all sorts of bookbuyers here who seem to consider the possession of the works of a favorite author a necessity rather than a luxury. Moreover, there seems to be a constant increase in the number of those who are seriously studying English literature and who are glad to acquire its masterpieces in satisfactory editions—and not its masterpieces only, but also the second-best books of the second-rate authors. Especially has this study been directed to the poets who wrote for the stage in the spacious days of "Eliza and Our James." Shakespeare came into his kingdom long ago, and lesser principalities are now possessed by his predecessors, his contemporaries, and his successors. Where Lamb was once alone in his ardent admiration, a multitude of critics have rushed in. That Elizabethan dramatist is deserted indeed whose text is not now encompassed about by a cloud of commentators. Dyce's various publications, once welcomed by readers who had had to be content with Doddsley's collections, are now being superseded by editions prepared in accord with a severer standard of scholarship.

THESE new editions are some of them only for the gentlemen who "form libraries"; and some of them are rather for the "average reader." Dr. Furness's Variorum Shakespeare, a massive monument of learning and of common sense, has been followed by the less expensive little tomes of the "First Folio Edition," containing the genuine text, freed from interpolation, enrichal with all needful apparatus for careful study—an edition admirably planned, carefully executed, and excellently printed. The Mermaid Series, welcomed a score of years ago for its unexpurgated text and for its cheapness, was followed in time by the pretty little volumes of the Temple Dramatists, sent out at first under the general editorship of Prof. Israel Gollancz, who confided the several plays to competent specialists. Just as the high level of the "English Men of Letters" was not maintained after Mr. John Morley withdrew from the editorship, so the earlier standard of the Temple Dramatists has not been maintained since the series ceased to be controlled by Prof. Gollancz. Recently the editing of Dekker's "Old Fortunatus" and of Massinger's "New Way to Pay Old Debts" has been intrusted to unworthy hands—to men uncritical, unscholarly, ignorant, and careless.

Fortunately at the very time when the Temple Dramatists were falling from their former position, the Belles Lettres Series began to appear, under the highly competent control of Prof. George P. Baker, who had secured the assistance of the best equipped scholars of the United States and Great Britain—Prof. Schelling editing two comedies of Ben Jonson's, Prof. Boas taking charge of two of Chapman's pieces, and Mr. Austin Dobson being responsible for Goldsmith's pair of comic plays. In the successive volumes of the Belles Lettres Series we may expect to find always the exact text, the full results of the latest research, and in general a high scholarly standard.

THE stately and dignified series of the collected works of the Elizabethan dramatic poets now in course of publication by the Clarendon Press began with the thoroughly satisfactory "Kyd" of Prof. Boas. Then there was a lamentable decline and falling off in the "Lyly" of Mr. Bond, who apparently acquired while he was sending the work through the press the knowledge he ought to have possessed before he passed his first sheet and who was therefore obliged to supplement and to correct in his second volume what he had printed in his first, while he was forced to amend and to take back in his third volume many things that he had printed in the two preceding volumes. It is pleasant to be able to welcome the "Greene" of Prof. Churton Collins as a worthy companion to the "Kyd" of Prof. Boas. In criticising other students of literature Prof. Collins has been harshly severe and he has been termed a pernicketty stickler for trifles. But, as Michael Angelo said, "trifles make perfection—and perfection is not a trifle." In his edition of Greene, Prof. Collins has carefully and conscientiously sought that perfection which he failed to find in the pleasant lectures of Mr. Gosse, for example.

Lowell was a little unfair to Greene when he charged that pioneer playwright with haying "all the inadequacy of imperfectly drawn tea," and when he asserted that apart from a beautiful line or two Greene was "naught." Prof. Collins is more liberal when he tells us that "Greene's services to English literature were great," and that "if he was not the father of the English novel, he carried it much further than it had been carried before." All students of dramatic development now recognize gladly that "it was Greene who first brought comedy into contact with the blithe, bright life of Elizabethan England, into contact with poetry, into contact with romance." Greene, however imperfect his own plays may be and however hesitating their movement may seem, pointed out the path to Shakespeare. He showed Shakespeare what to do and how it could be done, and Shakespeare was an apt pupil, who soon surpassed his teacher. Prof. Collins is not saying too much when he asserts that "Shakespeare owed as much in Romantic-Comedy to Greene as he owed to Marlowe in History and in Tragedy."

THERE is no need to criticise this edition in detail. It contains a text carefully reprinted from the oldest editions, with the variants properly noted. It excludes the "Selimus" which Mr. Grosart issued in the Temple Dramatists as Greene's, and the editor succeeds in showing that the attribution has very little warrant. It preserves the original spelling, not even removing the confusion of i and j, of u and v. Such indications of scene and of stage business as the editor contributes himself, or as he takes over from Dyce, he sets apart in brackets. He transcribes in full from the Alleyn treasures at Dulwich, the manuscript part from which the actor studied Orlando in Greene's "Orlando Furioso," a most interesting fragment which sheds light on the customs of the Elizabethan playhouses. He collects all the songs out of Greene's novels. He discusses in detail, with full knowledge and with robust common sense, all the many uncertainties connected with the biography and with the bibliography of his author.

In fact, the sole adverse criticism which it seems needful to make is that Prof. Collins neglects the work of his American predecessors in editing Greene's plays. He is courteous in considering Dyce, Mr. Grosart, and Prof. Ward; but he ignores or is ignorant of the work of Prof. Manly and of Prof. Gayley. Yet the text of "James IV." was printed in the second volume of Manly's "Specimens of the Pre-Shakespeare Drama," and the text of "Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay" was printed in the first volume of Gayley's "Representative English Comedies." It is greatly to be regretted that Prof. Gayley's suggestive note on Greene's versification escaped Prof. Collins's attention. British scholarship is still a little insular; it is forced to take account of German research, but it is not yet quite awake to the extent or to the importance of American investigation.

THIS edition of Greene is welcome; but even more welcome would be a satisfactory edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, prepared by a scholar abreast of all the recent discussion as to the probable share of other playwrights, especially Massinger, in the composition of the dramas now accredited to the two collaborators. Hope rose high when there came the announcements of two new editions; but hope is dashed to the ground by an examination of the first volumes of the two editions. The Cambridge edition, begun by the late Arnold Glover, is to be completed by Mr. A. R. Waller. It presents the original text, with the variants very awkwardly recorded at the end of the volume. It contains no critical apparatus at all, no discussion of sources, of date of composition, of composite authorship, or of stage history. Within its restricted limits it seems to be well done. But it is not the twentieth century edition of Beaumont and Fletcher which is wanted by all students of the history of the English drama.

Nor is Mr. Bullen's. The most striking of its deficiencies is that it appears in what the general editor terms "modern spelling"—that is to say, in the misbegotten orthography which was imposed on English by the ignorant printers and proofreaders of a century ago and which misrepresents barbarously the free speech of Tudor times. The editor admits in his prefatory note that "the plea of old spelling is quite reasonable," but he thinks that on "ordinary readers" it has "merely a disturbing effect." Surely it is not for "ordinary readers" that this edition has been prepared, has its footnotes filled with variorum readings, and that the several editors in their introductions discuss at length the very technical question of divided authorship!

ALMOST as unsatisfactory as the "modern spelling" is the interpolation into the text of stage directions, not set apart by brackets. It is true that this is what is done in the ordinary editions of Shakespeare, but it is misleading misinformation. It suggests that there was scenery on the Elizabethan stage and that this scenery was changed very frequently. It suggests that the playwrights then took thought always of the special place where each episode of the action was supposed to happen, as playwrights do to-day, now that the picture-frame stage has succeeded the platform stage. Even Prof. Collins is guilty of abetting this outworn error; but he is careful to set off these wanton suggestions in brackets.

Mr. Bullen has called to his aid as editors of separate plays Mr. P. A. Daniel, a competent scholar, whose contributions are excellent; Mr. W. W. Greg and Mr. R. B. McKerrow. But he has intrusted four plays of the ten contained in his first two volumes to Mr. R. W. Bond, the unfortunate editor of Lyly. Mr. Bond's characteristic lack of thoroughness is revealed again, especially in the "Custom of the Country." He overlooks the striking comment made by George Henry Lewes, (in his little book on the Spanish drama,) where he points out how the English playwrights significantly improved the fine situation they had taken over from Cervantes. He fails to record that this fine situation was used again by Watts Phillips in the "Huguenot Captain." And in dealing with the strange custom of the country he relies on Bayle, on Theobald, and on Weber, neglecting wholly the more recent French writers on the droit du seigneur.

MR. OWEN WISTER'S new novel

Lady Baltimore

"'Lady Baltimore' is the most engaging story yet written of Southern life. It is the quiet annals of an old Southern town told in the half whimsical, wholly sympathetic style of 'Cranford,' to which it is closely akin in charm. It reminds one, too, of Margaret Deland's admirable 'Old Chester Tales,' for it is written with the same loving appreciation of a simple neighborhood. With what a sense of humor, with what a delicacy of touch, with what a finished skill Owen Wister has made an exquisite picture you must read to see. It is like a dainty water color portrait, delicious in itself even it were not true; but to its truth there will rise up a cloud of witnesses.

"I am ready to venture that any Southern man or woman who reads it will stop often, with finger between the leaves, to say, 'Ain't it so? This is exactly the way it is back home. This is us.' . . . The book is charming in every particular."

GREEK LIFE.

G. Lowes Dickinson's Admirable Little Volume on Hellenic Culture.*

ONE must look beyond the demands of the schoolroom or the lecture hall to discover the explanation for the curious popularity of Mr. Dickinson's concise volume on Greek institutions, thought, and manner of life, which passed through three editions before copies were sent out to American reviewers. Obviously the book makes a sympathetic appeal to those who are becoming fearful lest the materialistic and Socialistic tendencies of the age should deprive life of all that pertains to imaginative effort, to beauty of environment, to sweetness of action and disposition, and to the encouragement of individuality—whether in the arts or in the life-conserving sciences. The thing has been tried before, but usually, whether successfully or not, in one of two extreme ways—in the form of an annotated syllabus for academic instruction or in the shape of monographs for specialists.

Mr. Dickinson, who is Fellow and Lecturer of King's College and at the London School of Economics and Political Science. and, incidentally, capriciously the author of "The Meaning of Good" and "Letters from a Chinese Official," has written the most popular, and at the same time the most modern, sketch that has so far, we believe, been presented on the subject. It is plausibly, as the author states, "a general introduction to Greek literature and thought, for those, primarily, who do not know Greek;" but it measurably oversteps this modest intent, if one may regard it as a warning to modern tendencies—a message from the past, whose service as a rational prophecy for the future seems most timely and appropriate.

In accepting the author's title, "The Greek View of Life," we must consider this "life" as meaning civilization made up of varied and manifold phases which group themselves around certain fundamental ideas. The word "Greek" in the title also requires a certain qualification, since the Greek of the Homeric age was not the Greek of the historic age. Mr. Dickinson at once appeals to the sense of coherence by grouping Greek thought and action under the following heads: Religion, The State, The Individual, and Art. He shows the origin and development of each phase, from incipient individual to national, or rather, to civic expression—since the Greek nation was the city.

THE first principle of Greek religion was that it had neither sect nor dogma; no distinction between priest and layman, none between the literature of revealed religion and that of the genius of imagination. It was an interpretation of nature which found expression in every human thought and action. In attributes it was essentially human, for its deities, although dominating the human, were in constant strife among themselves. These deities, who owed their origin to the imagination of man kindled by natural phenomena, were not merely to be approached by prayer, but their spirits were to be inspired, ruffled, or allayed by human gifts. From being regarded as the founders of society, they became the pillars of the family, race, and nation—physically and morally—until they represented in historic Greece what might be called the spiritual side of political life. Had practical education among the Greeks been universal there would have been no transition from pantheism to monotheism. With the progress of education, the ancient gods and goddesses would have become merely the symbols of natural forces, the utter disregard between cause and effect would never have occurred, and philosophy would have gone on hand in hand with scientific investigation.

The present Kingdom of Greece, almost the smallest of European States, would have appeared too large to the ancient Greeks to be a State at all. Their State or nation was a community bounded by geographic barriers and possessing civic rather than national qualities. The unity thus observed had to be maintained by physical force, and so we find the natural resources of the State—mining, quarrying, farming, as well as manufactures and commerce—encouraged and protected, not for themselves, but for the perpetuation and augmentation of the physical strength of the community as a whole. Of course, the best example of this aspect of Greek life is offered by Sparta, which, as we shall presently see, when we come to the aesthetic side of Spartan life, properly emphasized by Mr. Dickinson, bears a curious resemblance to Japan. In the first place, the existence of the military Greek citizen depended upon an inferior class, and in the second—a more curious paradox still—the mere complexity of a modern State is against the identification of the modern man with what the Greeks understood by the term "citizen." The life of the Greek citizen involved the finest and most complete exercise of the powers of body, soul, and mind. This cannot be said of the modern politician.

In considering the subject of woman's place in the life of Greece, it should be remembered that romantic, personal attachments so beautiful, so ideally modern in the pages of Homer, had practically ceased to exist when historic Greece came upon the stage. Accepting the Greek view of the "state" as final, the logical conclusion would be that the State exercised its prerogative in family affairs as elsewhere. The main end was to produce a race of "citizens" and all romantic and even maternal and filial attributes were sacrificed to carry out this idea. In his "Republic," Plato even goes so far as to eliminate the family altogether. In place of the sexual romances of Homeric Greece we have, in historic Greece, the friendship of man for man which, by its endurance and self-sacrifice, represented among individuals what the State expected of its citizens—an ideal which was to be eternally shattered the moment the innate sympathy and devotion of woman, her fancy, her intuition had a chance to exert themselves. The mothers of "citizens" did not long remain content to have the aesthetic part of the education of men administered only by the Hetaerae, and platonic friendship was too precious a thing to be monopolized by one sex alone.

THE closing chapters of Mr. Dickinson's book which deal with Greek life as it found expression in the plastic arts, in poetry of various kinds, in music, and in dancing, form a fitting conclusion to his general theme. Incidentally, they go far to show how modern writers, accepting Greek religion as a thing that is over, rather evade a frank discussion of the Greek social structure wherever such discussion must include the Greek appraisement of woman. Few writers, therefore, have succeeded in showing that harmony was the dominant idea and key to Greek civilization. Countless school texts contain words to the effect that this civilization produced soldiers and an unsurpassed art, but no attempt is made to harmonize these things. The oft-quoted phrase that the whole aim of Lycurgus "was to make the Spartans a race of soldiers" stands incomplete. These "soldiers" also made verses and music, danced and sang. The individual initiative in the soldier so ardently coveted by modern military leaders preconceives an education in which tactics and strategy are merely elements in a complete harmonious whole. The Samurai would probably have been overwhelmed by the Russians had they been merely fighting men and nothing else.

Greece did not fall because her civilization produced "a race of soldiers," but simply because the "soldiers" she finally produced allowed the fighting to be done by others. A "soldier" should be the pseudonym of "citizen" and not of "military specialist." The modern lesson to be derived from "The Greek View of Life" is obvious.

A WOMAN IN WAR.

CALLED TO THE FIELD. By Lucy Meacham Thruston. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

LUCY MEACHAM THRUSTON says: "I will tell you a tale of war from the woman's viewpoint," and in "Called to the Field" this is what she has done. What is more, she has done it so effectively that few, either of men or women, could read it untouched.

Whether your sympathies are with North or South in the matter of that great struggle of the Nation matters not at all. It is only a human question that counts, a story of how a brave man left his newly-made home and wife of five months for what beckoned him as the call of duty, and how she learns to wait and hope and fear and wait again.

Now Lucy Aylett is elate over a letter from the absent Robert. Now she is trying with the old mammy to save some of the family silver from marauders. Again she is daringly saving Henry Latham from imprisonment. One more day of that would have been a sad day for Emily, Lucy's little friend, who really cared for Henry despite her coquettish nature.

Ever and again we are afraid it is all over with Robert. Now it is because he drops, shot through the left shoulder. Now it is because of the smallpox which he crawls home with, but which none the less served to keep his enemies away from him. At the name of the dread disease, started by the inspired old mammy, the captors slink away.

This is one of the stories of miraculous escapes that is yet so simply and sincerely told we feel it must be true. Indeed, know we not truth to be stranger than fiction, and how even things more unlikely than these have actually been?

"There is an uplift to any life when it touches a brave one," said Lucy after her noble old father had told her the tragedy of his life.

The telling is the turn-point of her own life, and she vowed none should ever point to her as the first coward there had ever been in the Vancey family.

Bravery is the keynote of this story, which belongs to the class we feel must end happily. And in the last chapter we are not disappointed.

LITERARY ACTIVITY OF ANDREW LANG.

Two New Books from His Rapid Pen, a Life of Sir Walter Scott and a Volume of Collected Poems.[*]

FLORENCE WILKINSON,

Author of "The Strength of the Hills."

THE literary world is fortunate in its possession of Andrew Lang, as truly a man of letters, as true a type of the man of letters, as ever lived. An honest and enthusiastic critic, an able essayist, a gallant raconteur, a graceful verse-maker, well-equipped student, ingenious historian, expert amateur in psychic mysteries, collaborator, editor, compiler, lastly, but how essential to the making of readable essay and appreciation, in which field Lang is eminent, he is a hearty lover and hater. How the amiable reader in the literary amphitheatre, be it in the lowest tier of seats, enjoys watching his doughty knight hurl his Homeric lance or champion a cause! It is no half-hearted tourney upon which Lang engages.

Those writers whom he most admires, such as Thackeray, Scott, Dumas, have with him, we doubt not, a tinge of spiritual blood relationship.

Even in his verse he cannot forget his literary likings. In his "Remonstrance with the Fair" he says:

You condemn in the present and after,
To darkness of utter despair:
But a sin, if no rapture redeem it,
But a passion that's pale and played out,
Or in surgical hands—you esteem it
Worth writing about!

There are cakes, there is ale—aye, and ginger
Shall be hot in the mouth, as of old;
And a villain, with cloak and with whinger.

[Let no one be so base a cringer as to admit ignorance of this word! With apologies to Mr. Lang for the interruption.—F. W.]

And a hero in armour of gold,
And a maid with a face like a lily,
With a heart that is stainless and gay,
Make a tale worth a world of the silly,
Sad trash of to-day!

Why is this remonstrance addressed to the "fair" only and not to the vast company of fiction writers, including both the "fair" sex and the other, which, through lack of the appropriate general epithet I am unable gallantly to describe?

TO the task, then, of a "literary life" of Sir Walter Scott Mr. Lang brings all the resources of a mind and temper peculiarly well equipped. One cannot finish the first page without perceiving that "love-light" in the lines which is analogous to Barry's "love light in the eyes," a light ineffable, unmistakable, impossible to describe.

One does not read very much further than the first page before one is recaptured by the perennial charm of Sir Walter and the "braw gallantry" of his biographer. Mr. Lang by no means suppresses his own personality in relating the story of his hero, and of this one is glad. The old physician, Dr. John Brown, said of his beloved friend: "Mr. Thackeray was much greater, much nobler, than his works, great and noble as they are." All the world feels this of Stevenson, and also of Scott. Indeed, it is of the greatest geniuses that one feels thus. The conventions of art are too formal, the limits of expression too narrow, for the full development of an extraordinay personality. Whereas the reverse is true of minor talent, their supreme expression overtops the average of their capacity. They cannot rise to that climax nor be judged by that test. I use the term "minor talents" with a qualm, remembering some recent unpublished lines by a poet-editor, written in an impromptu spirit for a little "round-up" of poetry-makers.

Poor souls! But, after all, perhaps it's finer
To be a ghost than just to be a minor!
And this the critical insistence
That we are minor or have no existence.
Well, as for me, I'd rather be the latter,
Rat-catcher, grocer, gambler, tramp, or hatter,
Than be a "minor poet." Why, in the name of glory,
Are poets, of all the artists, alone put in this category?

But to return to Andrew Lang and his talent or genius, who can help feeling of him, as Dr. Brown wrote of Thackeray, that the man himself is more interesting than his works? He has written in divers keys, on many themes. Is there a realm of subjects over which he has not skimmed? Aside from his belles-lettres essays, "Letters to Dead Authors," "Adventures Among Books," he has delved into nooks of history, "The Valet's Tragedy," the "Mystery of Mary Stuart." He has written angling sketches, he has discoursed on custom and myth, he has taken up the cause of Homer and the epic, he has built a romance about Joan of Arc, he has collaborated in fiction with Rider Haggard and A. E. W. Mason. He has brought into being an endless chromatic scale of colored fairy books. But why enumerate? All the world knows what he has done. He has become, in a way, one of his own mysteries, this dear "Andrew of the brindled hair."

IT is within twelve months, if I am not mistaken, that he has brought out three books as widely varying as "New Collected Rhymes," "The Secret of the Totem," and this "Life of Sir Walter Scott."

There are shallow readers who smile, critics who carp, as critics always will, at facility, versatility. But why, in the name of Nature, is it not a blessing to have among us some men—God knows they are few!—of such abounding equipment, such catholic interest, such young enthusiasm, that they can turn out with ease, even with glee, achievements over which we ordinary mortals would groan and travail? Such fluent achievement is merely the reflex of superabundant mentality, of a nature alive and responsive to everything under the sun. It is an envious critic who girds, a foolish reader who refers to the voluminous writer as a "factory." Let us reflect upon what Mr. Lang says of Dumas and apply it to himself.

> The great charge is that Dumas was a humbug; that he was not the author of his own books; that his books were written by collaborators. There is no doubt that Dumas had a regular system of collaboration which he never concealed. * * * One might as well call any barrister in good practice a thief and an impostor because he has juniors to devil for him. Dumas's method, apparently, was first to talk the subject over with his aide-de-camp. This is an excellent practice, as ideas are knocked out, like sparks, (an elderly illustration,) by the contact of minds. Then the young man probably made researches, put a rough sketch on paper, and supplied Dumas, as it were, with his brief.

This is what, in a lesser degree, because the method has been applied not to romance, but to fairy and folk lore, archaeology and myth, Lang has done. He has supplied l'etincelle. He has, like Seumas, copied out each little leaf on a big leaf of paper, en y semant l'esprit a picines mains.

We like him. He is our friend in literature, as he would be in life. We smile in a friendly way over his ultramundane amours. There is a naiveté about his incontrovertible manner of putting forth the most controvertible theories, as this from "The Making of Religion":

> The modern science of the history of religion has attained conclusions which already possess an air of being firmly established. These conclusions may be briefly stated thus:
> Man derived the conception of "spirit" or "soul" from his reflections on the phenomena of sleep, dreams, death, shadow, and from the experiences of trance and hallucination.

What a brand of contention this would prove if seriously challenged by serious-minded persons.

One likes, too, the frankness, the boyish simplicity, with which the author explains himself in connection with the same grave topic: "No harm can come from trying how facts look from a near point of view. The author certainly did not expect them to fall into the shape which he now presents for criticism."

IT is to be noted that this life of Sir Walter is not only the life of a literary man, but a literary life. Those circumstances and phases which illuminate Scott's books are, therefore, dwelt on. Scott himself, although one of the most literary men that ever lived, a man steeped in history and legendry, his mind and conversation replete with anecdote and quotation, was not a bookish man. He was in essence a man of action, with those activities transposed, to use a musical metaphor, into a different key.

The unapproachable Lockhart life, in its many volumes, with its amazing wealth of detail, biographic and autobiographic, stands alone, will always stand alone, in the field of biography.

For those who have not the time, or who will not take the time to read this splendid memorial of a splendid life, Mr. Lang offers the present volume, with the prefatory remark that if all reading mankind had time to read Lockhart's "Life of Scott," a brief volume on Sir Walter would be a thing without excuse.

There is enough difference between this present work and its predecessors by the late Mr. Hutton and by Mr. Saintsbury to give it additional raison d'être.

It is the work of an own countryman of Sir Walter's, of one who has lived in and has gone over much of the same historical ground, who is familiar with the haunts and localities, and into whose possession have come some of the MSS. left by that great romancer. When Scott was in the little house at Ashestiel he presented all his poems to Mrs. Laidlaw, a neighbor, and these by her bequest came into the hands of the present biographer. Lang adds that if Scott had been the owner, not the tenant, of Ashestiel, Abbotsford would never have existed, "that unhappy palace of his race." In addition to these qualifications, Mr. Lang has in himself much of the same mystery-loving, legend-loving, story-loving nature.

The result is a biography which rivals in vividness, in sympathy, in racy interest all of its predecessors except Lockhart.

In place of the sober impartiality, the academic nicety of Prof. Saintsbury, we have the sturdy vehemence, the reckless dogmatism of Andrew Lang.

If we are among those who believe that genius comes from the Celtic race alone, we learn with glee that the poet was not without his share of Celtic blood.

"Scott knew nothing at all (nor do I) about the iambic dimeter, freely altered by the licenses of equivalence, anacrusis, and catalexis. To him these terms were 'bonny critics' Greek.'"

The Ballantyne business and the other commercial entanglements of Scott's tragically darkened later years the present life does not take up in much detail.

"And so enough," says Lang impetuously, "of this repulsive business."

"Flow on, flow unconfined, my tale," is the biographer's as it was the poet's motto.

By way of literary appreciation, first of Scott's metrical and then of his prose romances, Lang has much to say. Of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" he remarks:

> To appreciate the Lay and its success, we must either have read it in childhood, when 'glamour' seemed a probable art, * * * or we must have imagination enough to understand how perfectly and delightfully novel was the poem. * * * We do not now appreciate the charm of all this freshness. We live a century later, "the gambol has been shown," the Pegasus of romance has been put through all his paces before generations of blasé observers. * * * We have, moreover, what our ancestors of 1805 had not, the verse of Shelley, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Keats, and Coleridge present in our memories, verse deeply meditated, rich in thought, delicate in expression, "every reef deeply loaded with gold." Scott has these great rivals now; in 1805 he had no rivals save those who filled the times, already remote, of great Elizabeth.

THE anonymous romances of Scott began a literary revolution that has ended only in our present day, when the novel is supreme, and as Lang pregnantly adds, "The novels are not Waverley novels."

Here the biographer cannot forego the chance of having his say, as he does elsewhere, both in essay and verse, anent the popular novel of the present time, at least as he sees it:

> It was Scott, the greatest of readers, who inaugurated the reign of novel reading, and very much chagrined he would be could he see the actual results—the absolute horror with which mankind shuns every other study. It could never have occurred to Scott that within less than a hundred years male and female (!) novelists, often as ignorant of books as of life, would monopolize the general attention and would give themselves out as authorities on politics, philosophy, ethics, society, theology, religion, and Homeric criticism. Scott's own tales never usurped the office of the pulpit, the platform, or the press.

Lang takes up in characteristic fashion Scott's heroes, his women, his literary style, his private character, and with deep feeling and delicacy he reminds us of the pathetic last years of his life, his Titanic struggle to meet the famous debt, and his death after the sad journey to Italy.

There is probably no other author, unless it be Dr. Johnson, with whom the world is as intimately acquainted as with Walter Scott. And out of this intimacy he still towers a hero.

From the very virtues of his character spring what some critics feel a defect in his literary characterizations.

> As Molière never had the heart to draw a jealous woman, among all his pictures of men who knew, like himself, the torments of jealousy, so Scott never had the heart to draw a young and beautiful woman who is wicked. * * * Scott was no prude, but he held the young in reverence, knowing that among them he must have many readers. * * * He had funds enough to draw upon in human life and character without hunting for personages and situations in dark, malodorous corners.

MR. LANG, like Mr. Hutton, takes vehement issue against Carlyle's "splenetic" charge that Sir Walter's characters were "deceptively painted automatons." Scott's criticism of his own work in the introduction to the "Fortunes of Nigel," with his delightful answer to his own criticism is one of the most well-chosen extracts that Lang makes. It is in regard to the rambling and unlabored construction of the Waverley plots:

> That is a sore point with me, my son. Believe me, I have not been fool enough to neglect ordinary precautions. I have repeatedly laid down my future work to scale, divided it into volumes and chapters, and endeavored to construct a story which I meant would evolve itself gradually and strikingly, maintain suspense, and stimulate curiosity, and which finally should terminate in a striking catastrophe. But I think there is a demon who seats himself on the feather of my pen when I begin to write and leads it astray from the purpose.

"Resolution and determined forbearance might remedy that evil," says Scott's self-invented critic, a Capt. Clutterbuck.

How our romancer does revel in superfluous and extra-decorative invented personages as a more fanciful border for the romances of fancy they frame! Scott makes answer to this imaginary personage:

> Alas! my dear Sir, you do not know the force of paternal affection. When I light on such a character as Bailie Jarvie or Dalgetty, my imagination brightens and my conception becomes clearer at every step which I take in his company, although it leads me many a weary mile away from the regular road and forces me to leap hedge and ditch to get back into the route again. If I resist the temptation as you advise me, my thoughts become prosy, flat, and dull; I write painfully to myself and under a consciousness of flagging which makes me flag still more; the sunshine with which fancy had invested the incidents departs from them and leaves everything dull and gloomy.

I fancy that many other authors' hearts have beat responsive to the touching fidelity of this portrayal of Pegasus in harness.

I HAVE spoken before of Mr. Lang's other two books of recent date. "The Secret of the Totem" was put forth in a small edition, owing to the recondite subject and the peculiar limitations of its treatment.

The interest of it to the average reader (if, indeed, it finds enough readers from whom to compute an average!) is not that Mr. Lang is so expert an authority on the Fijians and the Arunta, the Piraungaru and Tippa Malku, but the wonder will increase that he knows or cares at all.

He, the poet of bog-myrtle and peat, bibliophile, lover of Longepierre, Caxton and Padeloup, preserver of rondeau and villanelle; listener to—

> The surge and thunder of the Odyssey;

follower of du Bellay, Ronsard, Jacques Tahureau, he who knows so well the haunting charm of old cities, Babel, Carthage, Cherson, Shinar, Caer-Is, Thebes—

> Where the wide-winged hawk doth hover, why should he pour out his golden moments upon totemic marriage laws and the knocking out of front teeth in East Central Africa?

THE "New Collected Rhymes" show many tuneful variations on the old themes. What de Banville says of the French traditional forms can be applied to Lang's verse:

Add to this Lang's commentary:

> Now there is some truth in this criticism, for it is a mark of man's early ingenuity in many arts, to seek complexity where you would expect simplicity. One can see this phenomenon in early decorative art and in early law and custom.

Of all the verse in this latest little volume, the memorial for R. L. S. called "Tusitala" has the deepest note, the freest swing.

> Once we were kindest, he said, when leagues of the limitless sea
> Flowed between us; but now that no wash of the wandering tides
> Sunders us each from each, yet nearer we seem to be,
> Whom only the unbridged stream of the river of Death divides.

In closing, I am moved to remind the reader of that striking reminiscence of Lockhart's narrated concerning a dinner party of which he, a young man, was one. He saw through a window on an adjoining street, (this was in Edinburgh, and in June, 1814,) a writing hand "that never stops—page after page is finished and thrown on that heap of manuscript, and still it goes on, unwearied * * *." Said Lockhart's host: "And so it will be till candles are brought in, and God knows how long after that. * * * I well know what hand that is—'tis Walter Scott's."

And he who has last brought this reminiscence to mind is Andrew Lang, whose unwearied "writing hand" still tosses off the sheets into an ever-accumulating heap, after the fashion of his great predecessor and countryman. As long as he tires not of his joyful task, neither do we. F. W.

Two Lippincott Novels.

"Breakers Ahead," the new novel by Mrs. A. Maynard Barbour, soon to be published by the Lippincott Company of Philadelphia, has been ordered very largely in advance of publication, and bids fair to be as successful as the author's earlier stories, "That Mainwaring Affair" and "At the Time Appointed." John Reed Scott's story, "The Colonel of the Red Hussars," which, in spite of its name, has no bloodshed or killing, and is therefore something new in modern fiction dealing with love, adventure, and intrigue, also promises to be a success, if the interest already taken in it before publication affords any reason for prophecy.

In sketching the picturesque period of the "wizard of the north," Mr. Jenks has done full justice to the earlier dramatic times of Jacobite uprisings which produced an atmosphere that influenced Scott peculiarly. He outlines the surroundings, influences and conditions of one of the most interesting periods in the history of English literature.

ANCESTRAL FETICH.

Weymer Jay Mills's Social Satire, "The Ghosts of Their Ancestors."[*]

By NANCY HUSTON BANKS,
Author of "Oldfield."

THIS new work by Mr. Weymer Jay Mills is a social satire in the form of a romantic story. The satire is so light that it sparkles, and the story makes no attempt to be serious. Yet the two taken together produce an effect out of all proportion to the actual size of the work. The result is something quite unique, something which happens to be of special interest just at the present moment, too, so that it comes in the very nick of time.

For with all its lightness and slightness this gay fantasy touches a rather serious matter. It turns an unexpectedly strong searchlight upon certain signs of the social times, revealing with startling distinctness one sign that seems particularly significant. In the opening pages it draws attention to the first unmistakable indication of reaction in a social movement which has been watched for several years by the whole country with increasing complacency or uneasiness—according to the different points of view—and these have been very different, indeed.

In a word, to satirize the worship of the Ancestral Fetich is this small book's sole reason for being, and it has the full courage of its brave mission. It sets out boldly, laughing in the very face of the formidable false god, under whose misrule the finding of a pedigree has conferred more distinction than the making of a State, and under whose alien influence the mightiest redwoods of the National Park appeared lately in imminent danger of being overshadowed by a spreading forest of family trees—all growing like Jonah's gourd.

And yet even this darkening shade has not quite killed out the deep-rooted National belief that every true American is his own ancestor. That article of faith never can die in this country so long as the memory of Lincoln lasts to keep it alive. There are even a goodly number of normal Americans who cherish it fully as much as they ever did, and who for that reason have been unable to take a humorous view of an essentially humorous situation. The truth is they have been too keenly alive to the humor of it—seen by the critics of the greatest Republic—to laugh at it themselves. On the contrary, many of them have earnestly longed for the appearance of some champion of common sense, having courage and strength to combat this tyrannous ghost, this overweening, browbeating Goliath of conceit. But the most hopeful did not look for any champion quite so soon, and certainly there was no expectation in any quarter of his coming in the shape of this little book—a slight David of fiction—armed only with a sling of wit filled with pebbles of irony.

WITH mock soberness the story begins in a grim old house full of prim people already shivering in the cold shadow of this identical shade. For the house is the original House of Knickerbocker, and consequently the birthplace of the Ancestral Fetich, or rather one of its birthplaces, since it appears to have been a twin with another birthplace in old Virginia. At all events, the story represents the awesome hybrid as firmly installed on Manhattan Island when the bells of old St. Paul's had barely done ringing for Independence, and Vesey Street was still the gentry street. This may sound rather far-off, but in fact both the period and the place are somehow brought curiously near. The illusion of the work is remarkable. It can hardly be too highly praised, and is all the more notable considering the very slight material used and the very light methods employed, although these same qualities may be the secret of the author's success, enabling him to realize airy creations which might have been as mist under firmer treatment.

Through the rarefied atmosphere apparently created by this light touch the characterization becomes singularly clear. There is the pompous head of the house, enormously puffed up by pride in his family, which he really knows little about—like many of his ilk who have come after him. There are his two elder daughters languishing within the walls built by vanity and sighing for the lovers lost solely through fear of the Ancestral Fetich—then as always—frowning upon simple worth. There, at the heart of the story, is the fair young daughter just then up in arms against the monster, and resisting its cruel determination to deprive her also of a lover, who lacks nothing save being born in the purple livery of the Ancestral Fetich. And there in the background are the neighbors looking on, gossipping, meddling—all as natural as life.

Nor does the illusion vanish under the supreme test of invoking the whole shady tribe of the Ancestral Fetich, of calling back all the ghosts of their ancestors and making them show themselves in their true colors before the descendants whom they have so long brow-beaten through false representations. The revelation is an awful shock to the House of Knickerbocker. Under it the strong gates of pride swing wide open and the high walls fall down, setting the lovely Patricia free to meet her lover's outstretched arms.

PERHAPS there are some real people who may find a certain amount of personal satisfaction in the end of the little story. Some possibly may go so far as seriously to think it desirable that a similar reaction should take place in the reigning House of Knickerbocker and wish that it might spread even unto its remotest branches. Indeed, some may actually hail this small book as the first handwriting on the wall. At any rate, it promises to be widely read, more widely than many a much more pretentious work. The story is full of charm of a kind to be felt rather than defined. The satire is never bitter enough to offend, yet always keen enough to reach the mark.

A THESIS NOVEL.

SAINTS IN SOCIETY. By Margaret Baillie-Saunders. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

HERE we have one more thesis novel, but despite the numbers of such this bears itself with a distinction quite its own. Mark Hadley, the fiery tongued, is a young printer with a vehement desire to help the laboring folk all about him to better opportunities. He is "discovered" by some wealthy noblemen, who turn his oratorical powers to advantage, until, hardly realizing it himself, he finds that he is in the vortex of success, financially, socially, politically.

Even after Mark forgets his old friends, the workingmen and their injustices, the wheel of fortune makes no visible backward move.

Meantime the little Cockney girl whom he had married, nobody could say why, before his career began, and whom everybody deplored, even as a millstone about his neck, is slowly but surely transforming herself from a slatternly product of the "submerged tenth" into a hard-working, sincere, well-dressed, and simple-mannered lady.

Chloris's impulsions arise from the nucleus of the ego. From the normal but not at all romantic desire to be like the one or two ladies she has seen it all begins. Sir Samuel gives her the first true hint; Dorcas, the gentle mission woman, gives her the next, with her definition—"a lady, a loaf giver." The giving of loaves, metaphorical and literal, to the little children of the neighborhood, at first enjoyed only because of the sense of personal elation, becomes a genuine pleasure to her, till she has attained a true womanly dignity and charm, though if asked any questions about the matter she would have acknowledged herself a failure.

Mark, starting out from the opposite basis, is hampered by his own sureness. He, who but he, can deliver up his people out of bondage!

The hideous revelation of his actual status comes to him through the gentle Dorcas, and along with the awakening comes the utter physical collapse.

If you remember that Mark dies a Baronet, and recall the significant and stately monument raised to him, you may wonder why we are prosing about failure. But if you will read the verses with which Margaret Baillie-Saunders has prefaced her story you will gather the text of her thesis.

EVERYDAY FOLKS.

THE SIEGE OF YOUTH. By Francis Charles. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.

FICTITIOUS characters are so like the famous little girl with the curl, invariably so very, very good or so very, very bad, that we are all too ready to be refreshed by a tale about people who are neither tediously good nor yet irretrievably bad. When you have visited the Terrace and met Jameson and Julian and Deborah and the brother and sister named Strong you feel as if these really are flesh and blood folk. You feel also that they are giving you a peep into a certain little Latin Quarter of our own land that proves itself almost as interesting as that more famous one over seas.

You will be fastidious indeed if you do not like Deborah, the plain-spoken school teacher with the big heart. You will surely be grateful for the way Alfonse comes round at last, and you must perforce be glad when Jameson, the consistent, learns to exchange his belief in "art, success, and ambition as a fair trinity" for a more human conception of life and its privileges. Nor, indeed, will you be seriously shocked when Julian, the veritable artist of the coterie, comes back from Paris and proclaims the original of that now world-famous portrait of his generally known as The Portrait of Suada.

Fogazzaro.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have in press for Spring publication an English version of Fogazzaro's "Il Santo." Antonio Fogazzaro has nearly twenty volumes in prose and verse to his credit, and is one of the most erudite, as well as popular, Italian novelists. Although his best qualities are probably exhibited in "Daniele Cortis," he is best known to foreigners through translations of his "Piccolo Mondo Antico" and "Piccolo Mondo Moderno."

FAMOUS MUSICIANS.

Ir. Finck's Life of Grieg, Mr. Gilman's Life of Macdowell, and a Study of Theodore Leschetizky.[*]

BY RICHARD ALDRICH.

THESE are the latest additions to the series of "Living Masters of Music," edited by Rosa Newmarch. They are welcome as contributing detailed information and criticism as to the works of men who, with the exception of Leschetizky, (whose biography by Countess Potocka was published a couple of years ago,) have not been the subject of extended consideration in English books. The remark in Mr. Gilman's peculiar idiom, with which he begins his preface, is applicable to them all: "The difficulty of achieving a just appraisal of the work of an artist whose activity is, in any sense of the word, contemporary, finds recognition in a conviction which has crystalized almost into a truism." All three of the men here treated are the subject of wide differences of opinion, but these contributions to the facts of their biographies, as far as they are such, and to the criticism of their work, will be welcome.

Grieg is the most important figure of the three, no doubt. Mr. Finck's book is an attempt to place him in the very fore front of modern composers, a rank which he is "absolutely convinced future generations will give him," and he has no words scathing enough for those who doubt. He will permit nobody to call him too enthusiastic, but he welcomes the description of "uncritical," for he believes that "the alleged critical faculty of our time is a modern disease, a species of phyloxera threatening the best works of genius." Thus properly forewarned, the readers of his book will know to what end it tends. They will not be surprised to be told that "from every point of view that interests the music lover, Grieg is one of the most original geniuses in the musical world of the present or past." Those who object to his "Norwegian dialect" in music are small fry pedants, cherishing the "most ludicrous notions," and reach "the height of unintelligence"; Mr. Finck turns upon them and rends them. At the same time it is "an egregious and all too prevalent error" to suppose that the essence and substance of Grieg's art are borrowed from the Norse folk music. Mr. Finck's position is that in Grieg's music there is much more of Grieg than of Norway. All who think otherwise do so only because through indolence and "a parroting propensity" they have not taken the trouble to examine the question.

THERE are interesting biographical details in the book. Grieg's meeting with Liszt in 1869 was a noteworthy occasion, as he described it, showing the great pianist's interest in and sympathy with a young man of unconventional ideas and repeating his advice to keep on and "don't let them intimidate you." Ole Bull was one of Grieg's earliest admirers, and it was by his advice that the boy was sent to Leipsic to devote himself to music. He had his influence too in turning Grieg toward nationalism in music. Grieg himself desires to disavow his remark, so often cited, that he, with Nordraak "abjured the Gade-Mendelssohn insipid Scandinavianism," so far as it relates to Gade, whom he has always held in the highest esteem, both as a man and a composer. The letter from Ibsen that induced Grieg to compose his "Peer Gynt" music is given, and is valuable as showing the dramatist's intentions in the matter. The singular incident of Grieg's being hissed in the Colonne concert that he conducted in Paris, because he had sided with Dreyfus, is explained at length. There is a pleasant picture of Grieg's personality in a letter from Mrs. Finck, describing a visit to him.

He is short and frail-looking. His back is somewhat bent from asthma, I suppose, and he has such delicate, nervous, thin little hands, so bloodless that they worried me until he touched the piano, when I saw that appearances were deceptive.

* * * His face is as individual, as unique, as attractive as his music; it is the face of a thinker, a genius. His eyes are keen and blue; his hair is long, straight, and almost white, and brushed over backward, like Liszt's.

YET Ernest Closson finds his eyes "superb, green, gray, in which one seems to catch a glimps of Norway, its melancholy fjords and its luminous mists." Grieg has written a number of interesting articles in magazines and elsewhere, some of them explaining his own attitude toward his own favorites among musicians—among whom are Chopin, Schumann, and Wagner, and he likes Brahms. In a letter to THE TIMES he declared once that his artistic convictions and principles are in no way "opposed to the Wagnerian propaganda."

MR. GILMAN is much more concerned with the work of MacDowell than with his life or personality. His life he dismisses in a short chapter of sixteen pages. He points out the origin of the Celtic strain in his music, in the Celtic blood of the man; tells of his study in New York, his entrance into the Conservatoire of Paris at the age of fifteen, and the remarkable result of his caricaturing his French teacher, who was so impressed with his graphic talent that Marmontel almost lost one of his cleverest piano pupils. As other musicians have done, he revolted against the traditions of the Conservatoire—a performance by Nicholas Rubinstein of Tschaikowsky's concerts was the deciding influence—and, after some experiments, he found his final goal in Frankfort under Heymann and Raff. His subsequent career as pianist, teacher and composer in Germany and America takes but a few words.

Mr. Gilman finds that "MacDowell presents throughout the entire body of his work the noteworthy spectacle of a radical without extravagance, a musician at once in accord with, and detached from, the dominant artistic movement of the day." He tries to make him out a radical who will have nothing of "a formal and merely decorative beauty" in music; his art is "directly and most intimately correlated with life"; his standpoint is that of "the poet intent mainly upon a vivid embodiment of the quintessence of personal vision and emotion, who has elected to utter that truth and that emotion in terms of musical beauty."

Mr. Gilman seems to be trying to say that MacDowell's predilections are toward "programme music." It is so only in general terms, however; he has avoided "shackling his music to a detailed programme." He is such a programme musician, then, as Schumann was. Mr. Gilman, who dismisses as merely decorative formulas all music that has no suggestion outside of itself, or that has only a suggestion—all symphonies and sonatas without names—is a little embarrassed by MacDowell's own words about his "Eroica" sonata, as "not exactly programme music"; or about his "Lancelot and Elaine," that he "would never have insisted that this symphonic poem need mean 'Lancelot and Elaine' to every one." This is error; this is almost compromise with "the absolutists," those who find it possible to enjoy music as music, and who can enjoy, perhaps even understand, the "Eroica" sonata without a knowledge of its literary basis. The composer is forgiven, however, because the error has not been "persistent or determined."

MR. GILMAN ranges through the list of MacDowell's work with a free hand, characterizing it lavishly and finding in his four sonatas for piano his most significant and important contribution to musical art. He does not agree that the songs are as fine as these sonatas or some of the shorter pieces, and in this he is right.

It is a time when sympathetic appreciation of the stricken composer should not be withheld: Mr. Gilman has not withheld it. He has written in a high-pitched key of praise. His book would be more agreeable reading if he would improve his style, which is "précieux" in the extreme. He is often as much preoccupied with his manner of saying a thing as with what he shall say. For him are not the "Russet yeas and honest Kersey noes," rather the "taffeta phrases and silken terms."

MISS HULLAH has given a lively picture of a personality prominent in the musical world in her book about Leschetizky. His has been an interesting career, and his present position is almost unique. He has been a "wonder child," a pupil of Czerny, a composer, a conductor, a musician who for years took an active part, working with Rubinstein and the others in stimulating musical interest in St. Petersburg under the auspices of the Grand Duchess Helen; a virtuoso known in many European cities. But his present fame has come to him since he settled in Vienna in 1878, and began the famous classes from which so many well-known artists have gone out. Miss Hullah has not a little to say about the musical and pedagogic methods of Leschetizky, but it is as a study of a strong and pungent personality that the book is most noteworthy, even though her attitude toward him is that of a pupil toward a teacher who is necessarily right.

It is a personality of great vitality, of positive and uncompromising force and self-reliance. He is of "small build, extremely wiry and high-strung, magnetic from top to toe." He "loves his pupils as if they were his own children," but he chastens them. The lessons, as they are recorded here, are an ordeal for some, it may be judged. He is full of "benevolent sympathy"; but it is not infrequently forgotten in the lesson hour. This leads to the sudden exit of the pupil, to the slamming of doors, to the crushing of music on the floor, to grim remarks about a future better spent in tomato planting. Once it led to total darkness, for Leschetizky in the rush of his emotions arose and put out the gas. On one occasion he went through the whole hour without a word, in solemn and mysterious silence, indicating all he wanted by signs.

AS to methods he is very broad-minded. Any suggestion that would make for progress is welcome to him. His plan in general is to cultivate the pupil's special gifts, leaving those things that lie entirely beyond his capacity entirely alone. He demands that his pupils learn by heart the works they study, so that not only the melody but the entire composition in detail can be seen and heard by the mental eye and ear; and his one inexorable point is the necessity of concentrated thought. From the English he expects good musicians, good workers, and bad executants; the Americans he finds more spontaneous; but they study "more for the sake of being up-to-date than for the love of music." The Russians stand first, in his opinion; the Poles lean to the poetical side. The French are "dainty, crisp, clear cut," and phrase well. The Germans he respects, but "their outlook is gray"; the Swedes are more sympathetic to him, and the Italians he loves—but they cannot play the piano in the least.

According to Miss Hullah, he is "the greatest piano teacher that the world has ever had." There will doubtless be divergence of view on this point; but many of his principles as relating to work and methods of work, and many of his results, are to be highly valued.

FIVE MEDICAL BOOKS.

A Compact Medical Dictionary, and Books on Personal Hygiene and the School Child's Health.

JUST about the time that the bulletin boards remind us that it is the time to take sarsaparilla and to cleanse our blood preparatory to Summer, five medical books appear. They are not all of equal merit—it would be better to say that they are not all of the same kind of merit, for they all seem to be excellent, though not in the same way, and more than one of them hints that the time to dose is when one needs dosing, and not necessarily Spring time because it is Spring.

Most important of the five is "Black's Medical Dictionary," edited by Mr. Comrie, an Edinburgh physician. This is a volume of the size and general appearance of "The Statesman's Yearbook," and "Who's Who." The basis for the volume is the medical articles in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, which have been revised and brought up to date; the rest of the book has been prepared in the same style, so that the reader notices no change of manner in the volume. The book is a happy medium between the purely technical medical dictionary and the "popular" "household physicians" so frequently found. In the description of a disease, the definition precedes; then follows a description of the causes, then an account of the symptoms, and finally one of the treatment. The book, as Mr. Comrie says, is for "district nurses, ship-captains, dwellers in remote districts, and others who may be called upon to treat the suffering in the absence of trained supervision." Simple matters are treated at length, but "subjects which are of a theoretical and intricate nature are treated only in outline. In this connection, too," continues the editor, "almost no reference has been made to diagnosis. Special attention has been given to subjects in which medical science has made recent advances, but care has been taken to avoid speculative and debatable views and to keep as closely as possible to what are generally recognized as ascertained facts." The book seems to us likely to be as useful in this country as it is in Great Britain. Its style is simple, and it seems to meet the needs of those for whom it is intended.

DR. CORDELIA A. GREENE was the author of "The Art of Keeping Well," which is in effect a memorial volume, the last half of the book being taken up with a sketch of her life and a selection from her sayings and letters, edited by Elizabeth P. Gordon. The part contributed by Dr. Greene contains some eighteen articles on subjects connected rather with hygiene than with medicine, all of them supporting the title given to the book.

Among them may be noted essays on "The Control of Mind Over Matter," and on "Hypnotic Influence." Dr. Greene was no hypnotist, but she understood the value of suggestion and mental control, as these articles show. The essay on "The Kingdom of Home" covers much more than its title indicates, and is perhaps the most valuable—in suggestiveness at all events—in the volume.

Dr. Greene was born in this State in 1830, taught school when seventeen—and thrashed the biggest boy in school when he started to run matters himself—and when under twenty began to study medicine, taking her degree from the Western Reserve University in 1856. At Castile, New York, in 1865 she founded a sanitarium which she managed until her death in 1904. Dr. Greene seemingly never married, but her biographer is unnecessarily coy about the matter; the six children who "called her mother" seem to have been adopted.

THE fifth edition of Dr. Rowe's "Physical Nature of the Child, and How to Study It" has appeared. This is one of the modern books on "child study" that have proved themselves of value. It does not, as too many books on pedagogy do, give the impression that the author considers the child merely an object into which so much of this ology, so much of that, are to be crammed in a certain time, or that the child is really a beetle to be studied through the microscope. It considers the child as a child, subject to ills as grown persons are, and having "troubles of his own" which may be removed or prevented if the teacher has a mind beyond books. Of course, under modern circumstances, the teacher has little time to be a man or woman, and the child has even less, but what time there is Dr. Rowe tells how to use to the best advantage.

There are descriptions of the tests for the sight, for the hearing, for the touch; the teacher is told when nervousness in a pupil should alarm him, when the child sits or walks badly—everything is told here that one should know in order that the school child should be in a condition to get the best out of its studies.

DR. CURTIS'S "Nature and Health" is an interesting book. It is desultory, yet manages to cover its subject fully. One can dip into it here and there, and be certain always of finding something worth while, told succinctly, with a dry wit that like the claws of the burr makes it stick. Dr. Curtis talks about breathing and eating, about drinking and "drugging for delectation," on sight, hearing, clothing, bathing, on exercising and so forth. The early chapters of the book deal with the subjects one expects to find discussed in a medical book, but the later treat of less usual matters—exercising the mind, sleeping and waking, working and playing, living and dying. The author believes that all work and no play is as bad as all play and no work; he believes in cultivating the imagination and the memory. His book will make its readers think—will exercise their mind, as Dr. Curtis says; and it ought to give them a good deal to think about.

A VERY excellent little book is "Personal Hygiene," by Brig. Gen. Woodhull, who was retired from the Medical Department of our army, where he had served most of his life, and later promoted a general officer on the retired list; he is thus no longer a retired medical officer. The chapters in the book were originally lectures delivered to the undergraduates at Princeton; they cover practically everything about the human body that one needs to know—from the study of the skeleton to the general development and care of the body, the physical culture exercises, and the ordinary things that one does—swimming, for instance—and the proper things to wear and eat. The General does not approve of tobacco and alcohol for growing lads—strange, but physicians don't, as a rule—and adorns his argument with many tales and pointed remarks. The teachings of the little book apply to girls as well as boys, and we think that its wide circulation would be a good thing for all concerned.

STORIES OF THE CAPITAL.

OLD WASHINGTON. By Harriet Prescott Spofford. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

THERE is a dewdrop quality about Harriet Prescott Spofford's style that gives it a gentle sparkle and makes the reading of one of her stories pleasant diversion indeed. In these little romances of old Washington she shows us picturesque characters of the South just after the civil war.

We see Mrs. Gilroy, with her daughter Connie and the one sign of their affluence "befo da wah" in the shape of a great gilded harp which "swears," if such a term may be used of so angelic an instrument, at all their other poor belongings.

The Gilroys have a room in Mrs. McQueen's boarding house, and this, it must be remembered, is before that institution "was improved off Fifteenth Street." The "guardian angel" of this mother and pretty daughter proves to be their old black woman, who could not be induced to leave them, while the harp (to say nothing of a young chevalier by the name of Jack Knowles, clerk in the State Department,) has a deal to do with the delightful dénouement.

There is the "little old woman" who has come to Washington with an imaginary claim on the Government. It is Mrs. McQueen who rescues her from slow starvation by carrying her home to her own hall bedroom and declaring that the payment shall be made after the claim is gained.

There is not time to describe the two quaint ladies of quality who live in the Terrace where honeysuckle was always green, nor to explain what "The Conspiracy" was about, nor even to describe the dear Colonel who slipped and hurt his leg just at the right time to learn the value of the self-effacing Queenie and to win—for himself the wife he had been vaguely imagining to himself for years.

"History has walked this way," said poor Mrs. Spence as she went through the hot Washington streets on her futile errand. It is the unheeded human histories not chronicled in any documental tomes that Mrs. Spofford has given us. They are slight stories, but reading them we quite forget that mingled humor and pathos exist anywhere outside of these covers, and—was it fancy?—but for a minute we could have vowed it was nothing more or less than the fragrance of cape jessamine that assailed us.

ALMA-TADEMA.

Percy Cross Standing's Sketch of the Highest-Priced Living English Artist.*

PERCY CROSS STANDING'S initial volume in the Artists' (living) Series, "Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, O. M., R. A.," comes at a time most convenient for artist and public. At an auction the other evening in this city Alma-Tadema's "A Sculptor's Studio" was knocked down to the highest bidder for $23,100. The significance of this price—the highest ever paid in this country for a work by this artist—need not be discussed here, in the light of the growing manifestation of an appreciation for the canvases of living English artists, but simply as it concerns Sir Lawrence himself.

Mr. Standing's volume also possesses the advantage—usually abused by biographers dealing with living subjects—of having been written under the direct sanction and with the practical co-operation of the artist himself. And this advantage in the present case is of real value, not only on account of authenticity of the facts set forth, but because Sir Lawrence's consummate sense of detail is herein visible, not only in setting down for the reader what is worth while, but in the selection, disposition, and reproduction of the illustrations, which, whether in color or black-and-white half tones, are splendid examples of pictorial work. The emphasis of detail in decoration, in clothing and personal paraphernalia, its absence from facial expression, and the absence as well of sharp contrasts from the chiaroscuror, are all thoroughly characteristic.

Born in a notary's family in a little Dutch town in 1833, the boy Laurens, or Lawrence, was early imbued with Greek and Latin classics as edited by the precise grammarians of the Netherlands schools. Here one may notice the formative influences which have followed him all his life. His unalterable adherence to the Corinthian in Greek art and life never became exaggerated or even idealized, whatever mischief his imagination might play with purely historical material. He worked hard at the academy in Antwerp from 1852 till 1865, when he removed to Brussels, and in 1870 established his studio in Paris. But London was the artist's obvious goal. As early as 1865 his "Egyptian Games" and "Sortie de l'Eglise" had been hung there in the old French Gallery. He did not remain long in Paris before seeking quarters in North London, and in 1871 we find him in St. John's Wood, where he has since remained.

Of the domestic side and family relations of the artist Mr. Standing presents intimate pages which would be somewhat out of proportion were it not for the fact that Sir Lawrence's second wife, as well as his daughter, Miss Anna, are artists of note, while another daugher, Miss Laurence, has achieved fame as a poet and novelist. Moreover, the family in St. John's Wood forms an ideal artists' community, and very few of Sir Lawrence's pictures there are which do not show its members in face or figure. For example, the entire family, himself included, is represented in the "Sculptor's Gallery."

ALTHOUGH the portraits which Alma-Tadema has painted show a distinct and interesting individuality, and his sitters have included famous personages, they are not the work of a great analyst of character, but rather that of an amateur dilettante in this department of artistic expression. His personal admiration for the sitter constantly dominated and secluded a consistent adherence to reality. While this is praiseworthy in the man and forms one of his most charming characteristics, it is to be deplored in the great artist. In what respect, however, is Alma-Tadema great?

It all depends upon the artist's power to impress upon the spectator a Greece, a Rome, or an Egypt which never existed. That this power has been successfully exerted nobody will deny. Ben Jonson's "Sejanus" was Latin to the core, but who remembers it after one has once seen or read "Julius Caesar" and "Antony and Cleopatra" by a man who knew "small Latin and less Greek"? There are some who believe that the ideal Greece and Rome and Egypt of Alma-Tadema are as satisfying as the Rome of Shakespeare, and posterity may approve their judgment. More conservative critics, however, undisturbed by the anachronisms of the poet, are repulsed by those of the artist, and for this reason: Alma-Tadema deals with but one phase of life, represents but one side of the picture, the aesthetic side, (in fact, many of his pictures are art subjects in themselves,) and wherever the passions or emotions depicted, these passions or emotions are poetic and modern and have absolutely no basis in real classical thought or inspiration. The Corinthian "mise en scène" of "The Education of the Children of Clovis" and the curious conglomeration of Attic and Frankish vestments in the picture suggest other anomalies. The Greek lady in "The Proposal," seated in a modern rattan chair, is another. But when all has been said in praise or blame, this fact remains: Alma-Tadema paints beautiful pictures with a consummate care of detail which never detracts from their dignity, in beautiful colors which in tone and harmony remain identical whether the interior be Greek, Roman, or Egyptian, and are extremely satisfying to the aesthetic optic taste unfettered by a knowledge of actualities.

AS has been pointed out, Mr. Standing's little volume arrives at a propitious moment, and is especially valuable as being the story which the artist himself would have the world know. As a craftsman he is unequaled—as for the rest, posterity may do him fuller justice. Possibly it may recognize in the placidity and unemotional aspects of his figures a splendid and rare secret of controlled impulses which Swinburne has so fittingly called "governance of blood" and "lordship of the soul." This is an essentially Greek characteristic, but no one is so foolish as to say that it entirely dominated Greek life—even in its aesthetic aspect.

A TALE OF THE FIFTIES.

JUDITH. By Grace Alexander. With illustrations by George Wright. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

THIS is a love story of the early fifties, in which glimpses are to be had of Lincoln and Col. Carroll, and the motif is the old struggle between puritanical consciousness and congeniality founded on aesthetic tastes.

Judith comes back from her year in Paris, all brimful as she is of life and spirits, to find Abel setting all his hopes on the continuance of the engagement she had made to marry him.

That engagement was made under rather peculiar circumstances, and the modern Southern belle would feel only a delightful thrill at the excitement of cutting such a Gordian knot most summarily.

However little sympathy we may or may not have with the present-day methods of playing with love knots, we can hardly sympathize with the carrying out of the scheme which is certain to make Judith miserable the rest of her natural days, and all this for what we moderns call a fine lack of common sense.

The contrast is striking enough between the plain young "farmer, spare, a trifle stooped, with colorless hair, a thin face, and blue eyes, out of which looked a pure and gentle soul," and the emotional, magnetic Methodist preacher, with the blood of the orator throbbing in every vein.

Miss Alexander takes us in graceful manner through a deal of "toil and trouble," of tea table gossiping, and political jobbing. Indeed, perhaps the most satisfactory pictures she puts before us are of the two dear old ladies, Miss Charlotte and Miss Jane. Indeed, against their background of honeysuckled bower and trellised rose vines nobody could help siding with their hopes for the young preacher's winning out.

Since the two most interested parties in the case do not pluck up courage to cut the knot and since Judith only tightens it by twisting it into the bond matrimonial with Abel, the only recourse left us is the old resort of the deus ex machina. That deus ex machina takes the shape of Abel's death, and, of course, it is comforting to know that on the last day the cloud which had hung over him since the night of his stroke lifted so that he cried out "Judith! Judith!" in a voice that revealed his appreciation of her faithfulness.

It was only a night or two later that those delightful busybodies, Miss Charlotte and Miss Jane sent a certain letter to a particular preacher in a far-away Western village.

The sequel tells itself, but we cannot help wishing when we have finished that writers would emulate the painters in being more particular about their subjects. Even a little still life in our literature might be a pleasing change from so much of the morbidly emotional and sentimentally analytical that we have been deluged with of late. Gautier knew how to analyze human passions to a gruesomeness, but he could also make bits of still life—witness his cameos so wonderful as to challenge the world's admiration forever.

Our American writers are so fired with the surgeon's ambition to probe the deeps that they neglect many of the lighter side issues, where a unique success might await them, and where in time they might make our workmanship take rank more nearly with that of so many a French stylist.

With us, though, the story's the thing, and if so be we get a tale not too hackneyed, well laid, and well told, we have really little just cause for complaint. Besides "Judith" is one of the blessed "and happily ever after" sort, and indeed its closing chapter has for text that good old line of Robert Browning's "plays at the morn."

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., NEW YORK

BRADY'S JACKSON.

A Readable Account of a Notable and Fascinating Public Career.*

To say that Dr. Brady has produced a readable book is perhaps superfluous. The conjunction of Jackson and Brady as subject and author could not fail to be interesting. But the reader who, relying upon the title, expects to find set forth startling revelations concerning Jackson's public or private life will be disappointed. His private life was of a nature to defy hostile criticism, and for his public career Dr. Brady has relied mainly upon printed biographies. He has made no use of the Jackson manuscripts now accessible in the Library of Congress.

Jackson's career has had and still has a great and natural fascination for Americans. More than a year ago two gentlemen, Mr. Augustus C. Buell and Mr. A. S. Colyar, both of whom had long cherished the desire to write about Jackson, produced, almost simultaneously, two lives of the hero. Unlike these authors, Dr. Brady had no such long-cherished desire. "I begun the study of Jackson," he says, "with no great predisposition to admire him. * * * I have become persuaded that he is one of the three great Presidents in our history." We should consequently expect a moderate book, and on the whole, when Dr. Brady's fervor does not carry him off his feet, this is what we get. We are not asked to accept Jackson as the greatest statesman and orator that ever lived, or the greatest lawyer or the best letter writer, or even the greatest General, though Major Donelson reported Wellington as saying in the course of a conversation in London "that he had carefully read the history of Gen. Jackson's Creek campaign; and if he had never done anything else, this would have made Jackson one of the great generals of the world." Dr. Brady thinks this authority good enough for italics.

THE frontier Bayard, the knight without fear and without reproach, who was never as happy as when defending injured femininity, is sketched in broad strokes. Dr. Brady writes that Jackson was vulgar. He was the people's idol, because he personified the America of his time. If he was vulgar, then America was vulgar.

Dr. Brady's labor has been one, to a considerable extent, of scissors and paste. In his endeavor to portray his subject, he tends to become a compiler of extracts and a collector of anecdotes. His method is justifiable in so far as he gets Jackson before the reader, but he has perhaps carried it to excess. He is not like those "great biographers," of whom he speaks, who "disdain detailed information." Many of the anecdotes here presented, however, are quite to the point in illustrating Jackson's character. In 1845 Jackson protested against Polk's selection of Buchanan to be Secretary of State. Polk justified himself by recalling that Jackson had himself appointed Buchanan Minister to Russia. "Yes," responded Jackson, "I did. It was as far as I could send him out of my sight, and where he could do the least harm! I would have sent him to the north pole, if we had kept a Minister there!" To Mrs. Jerome Bonaparte, who remarked to him that he must be proud to hold the place once held by Washington, he said: "Yes, Madam, it is a sensation not unlike that which a gentleman must feel when he is honored by the society of Napoleon Bonaparte's sister-in-law."

The niece of the British Minister informed him that he and Washington were the only Generals who had ever defeated her countrymen. "That, my dear lady," gallantly replied Jackson, "is because we are descended from your countrywomen." Dr. Brady is occasionally rather whimsical and far fetched in his observations and asides to the reader. Gen. Jackson appeared at a dinner at which was present the daughter of Henry Clay (his arch-enemy.) The hostess, in embarrassment, stated her dilemma to Jackson. "Madam," he answered, "I shall be delighted to meet Mr. Clay's daughter." "How Rooseveltian," adds Dr. Brady.

IT WOULD scarcely be proper to criticise Dr. Brady as a serious historian. He himself would probably make no claim to be such. He is uncritical and undiscriminating in the use of material. To take one notable instance. The late Mr. Buell in his "Life of Jackson" contributed a very striking discussion concerning the battle of New Orleans—"one of the most illuminating and valuable contributions to our history," according to Dr. Brady. The point raised by Buell was that the battle, though fought after peace had been concluded, was not in reality useless—that the treaty of Ghent provided for mutual restoration of territory, but that the English Ministry never acknowledged the validity of Napoleon's cession of Louisiana, and that in consequence England would have held Louisiana as a conquest from France had she won the battle of New Orleans, and lastly, that Jackson himself understood exactly what was at stake. Unfortunately for this hypothesis, the evidence is not good.

Gov. William Allen of Ohio in his old age retailed the story to Buell, claiming to have obtained it from Jackson, who is certainly not good historical evidence when the actions of his enemies were concerned. Such evidence, as every historian knows, must be used very cautiously. Dr. Brady swallows it whole, and declares: "To Jackson is due the vital fact that the western boundary of the United States is the Pacific and not the Mississippi. * * * It has been reserved for Mr. Buell * * * to bring out this point so clearly that it has now become one of the accepted facts of our history."

The book is, of course, not faultless in accuracy of detail. But Dr. Brady has one real qualification for writing on historical subjects which some biographers have lacked. He is always fair. He does not consider it incumbent upon him to love all whom Jackson loved or to hate all—and their number was legion—whom Jackson hated.

CRAWFORD'S LATEST NOVEL.

FAIR MARGARET. A Portrait. By F. Marion Crawford. With Illustrations by Horace T. Carpenter. One volume. Pp. 382. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

THE admirers of Mr. Crawford—and there are many of them—who have remained loyal to him through a long period of constant story writing will find "Fair Margaret" quite up to his customary standard of interest and excellent workmanship, even though in scene and characters it marks one of his infrequent departures from the land of Italy, with which he has long found himself in such close sympathy. This time it is a French setting that he chooses, with a heroine who is the daughter of an Oxford don and his American wife, and a hero who, through no fault of his own, finds it expedient to bear an assumed name, while the melodramatic flavor so dear to Mr. Crawford's heart is furnished by the machinations of a polished villain of Greek extraction and the Bohemian atmosphere inseparable from a story dealing with the Paris opera stage. The romance into which he has woven these characters and some other minor ones drawn with equal pains, is probably as good as anything he has put forth in recent years, even if it does not fulfill to any appreciable extent the promise of more than one of his earlier books. There was a time in Mr. Crawford's career when it seemed among the possibilities that he might some time achieve greatness, but, judging by "Fair Margaret," he has so far succeeded only in not deteriorating. That in itself, however, is not faint praise when one considers that we have been indebted to him for about two novels a year for the last twenty years, while with most writers of fiction the first book represents their high-water mark in no uncertain fashion.

Mr. Crawford calls his "Fair Margaret" a "portrait," but it is evidently an unfinished portrait since the present volume ends with a reference to itself as "the first part of this history" and leaves matters entirely unsettled between hero and heroine. It describes the career as an opera singer of Margaret Donne, who is an orphan, has been cheated out of her inheritance, and has too much American independence in her make-up to live upon the generosity of her mother's old friend, Mrs. Rushmore. Mrs. Rushmore, by the way, is an American dame of the kind that Mr. James, Mr. Crawford, and some other alienated Americans, take peculiar pleasure in setting off in strong colors and with plain intent to render ridiculous. Mrs. Rushmore's main weakness was a fondness for entertaining society "lions," and at the opening of the story, one of them, who is known as Edmund Lushington, but whose real name is Thomas Goodyear, has fallen in love with Margaret. There are obstacles which forbid his saying so to her, however, and there follow the misunderstanding and blunders which are the usual accompaniment of this sort of silence, and invariably give the designing villain a chance to enter the scene. In this case Mr. Logotheti enters with vigor and remains with power, and nothing but a sequel will be able to convince us that Lushington ever developed enough strength to put him finally and effectually in the back ground.

The truth is that Lushington will have to develop a great deal to make us like him. Some way a hero who perspires with shyness and is always being described with a dewy forehead, is not a fascinating figure, however worthy he may be. Even Margaret never reaches a very enthusiastic point concerning him, the final compliment being "that he always acted like a gentleman and sometimes like a hero." But he did possess the pleasant Anglo-Saxon characteristic of being able to rise to great occasions, and it is certainly hardly fair to judge him at the end of the first volume. Logotheti and Mme. Bonanni, the great prima donna, are studies in character finished enough to show that Mr. Crawford's hand has not forgotten its cunning. The story is told, too, in his own charmingly leisurely fashion, with many stops by the way to comment or to analyze, and we confess to a distinct desire for its sequel.

The "Perplexed Subscriber" Not Yet Wholly Enlightened as to Poetry and Prose.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

PERMIT me to express my acknowledgments to "K. G. W." and to Mr. Brashear for their friendly efforts to rescue a "Perplexed Subscriber," who, after conning Whitman's Apotheosis of Sweat ("Leaves of Grass") and Mr. Gilder's "There's No Place Like the Old Place," had about come to the conclusion that they were neither "pig, perch, poultry, nor good plain pickles."

The first, I confess, suggests to me not the meditations of a sage, but the mouthings of a mountebank, whose head—weak at the best—had been quite muddled and maddened by worshippers of the coarse and commonplace. The other piece reminds me of a little of "Home, Sweet Home" revised, if not improved, for the benefit of those who are followers of the laureate of loaferdom.

This metroölogy of the "Whitmaniacs," however, is perhaps a natural enough reaction from the new impressionist school of verse, (analogous to the "school of daub" in art,) the writers of which seem much more concerned with metrical than mental processes, (sound rather than sense,) with the result that even doggerel nowadays becomes darkly delphic in its utterances, and Mother Goose poses seriously as a Sibyl.

Of my two informants I should feel tempted to say Mr. Brashear the safer guide, though of Whitman's writings, "Poetry in Solution," I should think nearer the facts to say "watered stock," and the "water" not from Helicon, but from some place nearer hades.

As a dweller in the "Over Hills," a rustic from the ridges of the blue, it may seem presumptuous to express such opinions, but, appositely enough, Mr. Boynton's comments on "The Dynasts" would certainly support my contention. "Pulling one's self up to the peak of Parnassus by one's bootstraps" may be a remarkable "feat," but has nothing to do with the "poetic foot."

I almost wish I could persuade myself that "capitalized prose" (capital letters at head of each line) could convert poppycock into poetry, for then perhaps even I might sing my own songful soul to the "thrummings of the lyre." Like thousands of others, I am inclined to believe that my inspirations are poetic enough, and if rhyme and rhythm could be dispensed with, I fancy I could make capital poetry, if merely capital letters would suffice to transmute my "pebbles" of prose into poetic "pearls."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I heartily concur in the opinions of "A. M. H." of Port Royal, S. C., regarding the distinguishing features of prose and poetry. I have always derived great pleasure and benefit from the reading and study of poetry, but prefer the works of Tennyson, Longfellow, Whittier, and the like. Have read only short selections from Browning and Whitman, but my aversion to their work is so strong that I have never forced myself to reach much of it.

In music, too, I prefer the simpler and more melodious forms, and believe it is due to intellectual honesty rather than lack of taste.

In my opinion "A. M. H." is entirely able to uphold our side of the controversy if given plenty of space; so will not try to add anything. C. H. E.

Harrisburg, Penn., April 3, 1906.

III.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I more than suspect "A. M. H." of having a twinkle in his perplexed eye. Instead of seeking an all-embracing "poetic rule of thumb," why not throw over minor "poetic rules of thumb"?

Being, as he tells us, neither a poet nor a critic, but a free and independent reader, why not boldly follow Sidney Lanier, e'en though he was both poet and critic? "For the artist in verse there is no law," says Lanier in "Science of English Verse." "The perception and love of beauty constitute the whole outfit. * * * In all cases the appeal is to the ear; but the ear should, for that purpose, be educated up to the highest possible plane of culture. With this sort of ear understood, one may say that King James has summed up the whole matter in his homely Scotch words: 'Zour eare maun be the onley iudge, as of all the other parts of Flowing, [that is, rhythmic movement,] the verie twichestane quhairof is musique.'"

"A. M. H." may even, on this basis, still find himself a perplexed reader of certain poets and certain critics. He may still ask himself in vain why they call what seems to him to be "capitalized prose," "capital poetry." But dear "A. M. H.," such is the common lot of man. If you are sufficiently modest, you will conclude that your ear has not yet been "educated up to the highest possible plane of culture." If you are sufficiently daring you may perhaps conclude that the poet and critic of today is even as fallible in such matters as time has more than once proved the poet and critic of past ages to have been.

Yet it would seem as if there must be poetry in the fields of yellow corn of "Over the Hills of Ottaray" as well as in the woodlands. And if at this late day one does not grasp the beauty and grandeur of Wagner's music, is it not likely that one will remain "perplexed" about many things beautiful to the end of the chapter? JAX.

Reactionary Spellers.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Charles E. Sprague's letter suggests to me that probably few people have any idea how many etymological blunders are perpetuated by retaining silent letters. Here are a few:

"Could" should be spelled, etymologically "coud." The silent "l" in "would" is right from the standpoint of the orthographic reactionaries, because it shows the connection of "would" with "will." But the silent "l" in "could" is false analogy.

"Island" has a silent "s," again due to false analogy, (isle.)

The silent "gh" in "night" and "right" may be justified by assuming that it is a vitally important thing to be reminded every time we write these words that they are Teutonic, allied with the German "Nacht" and "Recht"; but the silent "gh" in "delight" is simply a blunder. There is no "gh" in the allied Spanish "deleite" or Italian "diletto."

"Tongue," if spelled etymologically, would be "tung."

"Honour," "favour," and similar British spellings contain a silent "u," which the British etymologists themselves concede to be wrong. The correct etymological spelling is "honor," "favor," &c., because these words come from the old French and not from the modern French "honneur," "faveur," &c. "Behaviour" and "endeavour," quoted by Mr. Sprague, are ridiculously false analogies.

But the most remarkable crime in etymology is "neighbour." Our British friends make this word masquerade as a double-dyed hypocrite, for, while it carries a silent "gh" betraying its Teutonic origin, (German "Nachbar,") it also displays a silent "u" so as to make a weak bluff at being derived from French like "honour"!

I am inclined to be an etymological revolutionist and dynamite the whole wretched mess of silent letters out of existence. I have no patience with the reactionary worshippers of etymological spelling. But it seems to me that the (generally misunderstood) scheme of the conservatives, the Board of Simplified Spelling, is a sensible and decidedly practical step in the right direction.

FREDERIC W. MITCHELL.

Simplified Spelling.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Mr. Carnegie has furnished us with a new amusement. "Simplified Spelling" is really quite a game. I advise your readers to try it. A party of us got together a few nights since and had a hand at it. We decided that the "committee" will find some tough problems awaiting it. We tried many words and we took up those "bêtes noires" ending in ough. I want to tell you of our experiments with "cough." It is a dandy word to spell and "don't you forget it."

We found it to have three sounds, namely, k, broad a, and f; just think of writing it "kaf." And now let me show you in how many ways these three sounds can be and are expressed in this wonderful language of ours. The sound of k is expressed by c in care; by k in keep; by ch in chaos; by kh in khedive.

The sound of broad a is expressed by a in call, by aw in paw, by au in haul, by augh in daughter, by o in or, by ough in ought, by our in four, by oar in soar, by ore in sore, by awe in that word; the sound of f is expressed by f in lift, by fe in life, by lf in half, by gh in laugh, by ph in sylph, by rf in wharf, by ff in stiff, and there may be others.

We thus have four times nine times seven, or 252 ways of spelling just that one little word, which it should be impossible to spell in more than one way or with more than three letters. Some of these forms are really elegant, as, for instance, ch-ough-gh, and kh-augh-rf, and ch-ore-ff, and ch-augh-ph. I do hope the committee will tell us how to dispose of this particular word—and some others.

C. E. HUDSON.

Martin Van Buren.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Please allow me space in your columns to thank publicly Mr. W. H. Johnson for his vindication of the character, abilities, and services of Martin Van Buren, author of the Sub-Treasury law which was passed during his Administration as President, repealed under Tyler, re-enacted under Polk, and has since been almost as much a part of the fundamental law as if it were a section of the Constitution. Mr. Van Buren ranks with Alexander Hamilton in his services to American finance. Yet how differently has he been treated! And I think that it does not speak well for the intelligence or gratitude of our Chamber of Commerce, nor the Stock Exchange, that no permanent tribute has been erected by either of these bodies to Mr. Van Buren.

Mr. Van Buren's place in the history of American finance will grow with the lapse of time, and he will come to be regarded as one of our great Presidents.

HARPERS BOOKS

Silas Strong Emperor of the Woods

The man who hoped for "better times" and who used to say often "Strong's ahed," by which he meant that in his fight with Satan he had at least temporary advantage. Go with him on the trail to happiness and hear his quaint old songs and listen to the tale of The Mellered Bear and the Peppered Racoon. You will laugh with him, and now and then feel a touch of deep pathos. And you will see the beauty of God's land, and feel its restfulness, and smell its perfumes. The author is Irving Bacheller.

In Sun or Shade

A volume of lyrics written in various moods, by Louise Morgan Sill, with other verses that may have an enduring interest for the lover of poetry. The poems reveal a true poetic spirit, coupled with unusual melody of line and rare felicity of diction. The verses are opalescent with many beauties.

The Genius

Margaret Potter's new novel has for its background the great grey land of Russia. "A notable novel," says the N. Y. Mail, "the rise of genius to the heights of world fame is tellingly traced."

Miss Primrose

"Sweet and quaint as the title is, it doesn't give a hint of the delicate imaginings to be found in this latest work of Roy Rolfe Gilson's. All the delightful spontaneity and freshness of the writer's style are manifest."
—Columbus Journal.

Chatwit The Man-Talk Bird

By Philip Verrill Mighels. "An ingenious story of wild animal life. It is a tale that increases interest in wild creatures by bringing us into close touch with them."—Boston Herald.

Randvar The Songsmith

HARPER & BROTHERS.

BOSTON NOTES.

Gamaliel Bradford, Jr.'s, Novel a Change from the Usual Sociological Book of Fiction—Prof. Hyslop on Hypnotism—Other Books.

THOSE who, after suffering many things at the hands of bellicose authors, have vowed to avoid all novels discussing the relation of wealth and poverty will not forswear themselves by making acquaintance with "Between Two Masters," by Mr. Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., for it is entirely unlike the stories which they had in mind when they took their pledge of total abstinence. Its keynote is moderation; its movement is deliberate; it makes no scenic display of poverty or riches, and its most striking character is she to whom nothing happens, because she dares not takes sides. Further, although nearly all the chief personages are intent upon believing in accordance with great principles, their action is finally determined by trifles beyond their control, so that the little book will seem very real to those who have observed life. The athletic girl, a young person weighing 102 pounds, is made lovable and admirable, and living athletic girls may be thereby consoled for the unkindness shown toward them by the author of "The Evasion."

Mr. Bradford's book is announced by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. for April 14, their next publishing day. The following Wednesday will bring Mr. Gelett Burgess's "A Little Sister of Destiny"; "The Personality of Jesus," by Mr. Charles H. Barrows, a former President of the International Training School of the Young Men's Christian Association, and "Language, Literature and Art," the third volume of the proceedings of the International Congress of Arts and Sciences.

As generally happens, it has been found necessary to make some additions to the Spring catalogue, and one of the books, a little volume by Prof. Münsterberg, entitled "Science and Idealism," contains a lecture delivered at Yale University, and based on a chain of reasoning to delight the most orthodox Christian. Another book, "The Reading of Shakespeare," by Prof. James M. Hoppin, author of "Greek Art on Greek Soil" and "Old England: Its Scenery, Art, and People," is intended for those who desire to read critically, without too curious consideration of words and roots. Chapters are given to Shakespeare's life and learning, to nature and art in his plays, and to his morality and style, and then the plays are taken up separately, and a chapter on the group of great tragedies closes the book.

The Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company is preparing a new edition of Miss Mary E. Stone Bassett's "The Little Green Door," and a third edition of Mr. Aaron Martin Crane's "Right and Wrong Thinking" will soon be necessary, for its sales augment steadily. Mr. Everett T. Tomlinson has sent in the manuscript of "Four Boys on the Yellowstone," a volume beginning a new series to be called "Our Own Land," and intended to show American readers the special marvels which their native country can show them. Manuscript, by the way, means manuscript in Mr. Tomlinson's case, for his own pen is his means of communicating with the printer.

Messrs. Herbert B. Turner & Co. are sending a fifth edition of "Broke of Covendon" to press, and have received the manuscript for a new story by its author, Mr. John Collis Snaith. The title is "Henry Northcote," but it is not a biography of the first Baron Northcote, but a novel, less complicated than "Broke," but quite as eventful.

A new book by Prof. James H. Hyslop, "The Abnormal in Psychical Research," will appear in early Summer, at the right moment to accompany the clergyman and the professor during the Summer vacation. Hypnotism and mysteries of its class are the subjects.

Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., in the intervals of producing fiction and history, continue to bring out law books, and this week have published "A Digest of the Law of Trade Marks," by Mr. Norman F. Hesseltine. It is a compact statement of the entire law on trade marks and unfair trade, with a digest of all the cases upon which it has been formulated, and the record is brought down to February, 1906. The trade mark law of 1905 and the rules of the Patent Office are added in an appendix.

A third edition of Judge Walter C. Noyes's "American Railroad Rates" is announced. President Ripley of the Santa Fé Railroad has ordered that this work shall be placed in the thirty reading rooms maintained by the company for its men, and has distributed copies among the general and division officers.

"The Victorian Chancellors," by Mr. J. B. Atlay, has been added to the Spring list, and the first volume will appear April 28. It will have seven portrait illustrations, one of which is "The Trial of Queen Caroline." The Chancellors whose lives are included in this book are Lyndhurst, Brougham, Cottenham, and Truro. The second volume will appear next year.

In May, Anne Warner's new novel will appear under the title of "Susan Clegg and Her Neighbors' Love Affairs," but it will be preceded by a third edition of "On the Field of Glory," by Henryk Sienkiewicz. "The Wire Tappers," by Mr. Arthur Stringer, has been postponed until May 5, and Mr. William Sage's "The District Attorney" until a week later, but Mr. Oppenheim's "A Maker of History" appears immediately in an edition of 10,000.

The C. M. Clark Publishing Company has two more novels in preparation, "Belle of the Blue Grass Country," by Mrs. H. D. Pitman of St. Louis, and "Maid of the Mohawk," which is an Indian romance by Mr. Fred A. Ray.

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. have changed their plans for "The Foolish Book of Etiquette," and the entire book has been written anew, partly by those whose contributions enlivened the "Foolish Almanac," partly by other well-known journalists. Messrs. Wallace Irwin, W. D. Nesbit, Nixon Waterman, D. K. Stevens, R. R. Whiting, Newton Newkirk, and J. Frank Davis are of the number, but Charles Towne has decided not to contribute.

This firm is preparing another ingenious volume, a companion for "All by Wire," but not requiring quite so much of the reader's co-operation to become an intelligible story. The title is "Miss Dean's Double Log," the voyage being from New York to Bar Harbor, and the time about a fortnight. The true "Log" is printed in the way customary for maritime use, is of the same shape as the ordinary ship's logbook, and contains the customary entries, with curt daily comments. The indolent may entirely neglect this if they choose, for it is interleaved with the heroine's diary, as full and minute a record as can be expected from a girl with love affairs to occupy her mind.

The dramatic rights to "The Girl in Waiting" have been bought by the Messrs. Shubert, and the part of Lilian will be taken by Miss Virginia Harned.

Mr. E. J. Houston of the firm of Thompson & Houston, emeritus Professor of Physical Geography in the Boys' High School, Philadelphia, and the author of many scientific books and manuals for electricians, has made an excursion into a new field, and the holiday list of the W. A. Wilde Company will announce "The Young Prospector," a story of electrical engineering and mining. Whatsoever his ability to interest young readers may prove to be, there is no doubt as to his profound and accurate knowledge of his subject, and boys will not have to unlearn anything acquired from his pages, and this is more than can be said of all books treating of trades or professions.

Miss Mary Hazleton Wade, whose Indian stories "Ten Little Indians" and "Ten Big Indians" have been so successful, is preparing a volume of folklore Indian stories as a companion for them, and this also will be issued by the Wilde Company.

"Life Insurance Housecleaning," the title of a paper written by Mr. Charles J. Bullock for the May Atlantic, promises a review of a question concerning which curiosity is still active, and Mr. J. M. Muirhead's "Baedeker in the Making" will gratify the languid wonder with which one always contrasts the exactitude of the friendly red volumes and one's own vague impressions as to connections and junctions. "Man and the Actor," by Mr. Richard Mansfield, and "Camping with the President," by Mr. John W. Burroughs, are sure of readers, and for the large number preferring fiction there will be stories by Mr. Chester Bailey Fernald, H. M. Rideout, Elsie Singmaster, and Miss Florence Converse.

Mr. Richard G. Badger's Spring list includes something more than poetry, and "Our Common Wild Flowers," an illustrated work by Miss Alice Dowd, is a venture in a new field. Five novels, among which "The Passion Stroke; a tale of Ancient Masonry," by Miss Mary Fairweather, promises well, and one religious book will be followed by eighteen volumes of verse, among which "The Iliad of Homer," translated by E. A. Tibbetts, is the most important.

Mr. Dean of Messrs. Dean & Son, the London publishers of "The Foolish Dictionary," has been visiting the Boston publishers with results which will appear later on more than one list.

Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. have two Oriental books in preparation, "In the Heart of Japan," by Mrs G. Adams-Fisher, and "The Philippines from a Cable Ship," by Mrs. Florence Kimball Russel. Mrs. Adams-Fisher has traveled and lived in remote parts of Japan, and is fond of the people and vividly interested in their customs. The book will be illustrated and elaborately bound. Mrs. Russel is the wife of Major Russel of the Signal Corps, and accompanied him on his voyage in December, 1900, when the cable was laid from Manila. The pictures illustrating the book are from photographs taken by the author, whose opportunities to obtain novel views while the cable ship slowly skirted the islands were uncommonly good.

A PREMATURE SOCIALIST
OUIDA'S WITTIEST STORY BUILT INTO A COMEDY.
By MARY IVES TODD
Author of "VIOLINA," "An American Abelard and Heloise," &c.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST—likely to be our next President—says of it: "I am sure I will read the book with interest."

ELBERT HUBBARD, a unique, all-round genius, asserts: "I am reading it with pleasure and profit. You surely show an insight into the heart of things that is very excellent."

As usual, 'tis a woman who caps the climax. That woman is DOROTHY DIX, America's greatest woman humorist: "Thank you very much, indeed, for the beautiful copy of your brilliant book which you sent me, and which I have read with the utmost delight. I have not seen anything in a long time so full of human nature, so spontaneously witty and with such deliciously funny gibes at social conditions, and the impossibility of living up to one's ideals in the world as things are now arranged. I share your hope that the little play may be put upon the stage where, whether the multitude fancied it or not, it would be a joy to the discerning."

FURNITURE OF THE PAST.

PERSONS who have coveted the numerous, luxurious, and expensive monographs of the furniture of France and England, but have been debarred from acquiring them because of lack of means, should hail with delight a general sketch of the whole subject from the pen of Virginia Robie, the text of which is most generously and, for the most part, intelligently and artistically illustrated with half tones. ("Historic Styles in Furniture." Thin 8vo. Chicago: Herbert S. Stone.)

The subject is treated of chronologically, except where the French and English styles cross one another, as it were. Beginning with the Middle Ages, the author sketches the development of household implements in their aesthetic aspect, through the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; then come the Italian and French Renaissance; Germany and the Low Countries, the Spanish Renaissance, "English Furniture of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries," the styles of the three Louis, the wonderful work of the independent makers of England in the eighteenth century, the Directory and Empire furniture, and, finally, the so-called Colonial furniture, which has especial interest for Americans. Graeco-Roman forms are only mentioned where they gave the basis of Renaissance designs.

The book, which is popularly written, adequately serves two purposes—an introduction to those elaborate monographs by specialists already mentioned; a textbook by means of which the modest householder may be inspired to beautify his home in many artistic ways.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

RUDOLPH FITZPATRICK.—Mrs. Anna Ellis requests that you inform her where she could get a copy of a song called "To the West," and concludes her communication by stating that the song was published over Charles Mackay's name by mistake, as she, Mrs. Ellis, wrote it for her husband to use in an article on Dakota in 1883. In the early fifties Henry Russell made a tour through Great Britain and Ireland, and while in the latter country was my father's guest in Cork. This was about 1854. In this tour Mr. Russell gave an entertainment entitled "The Emigrant's Progress from the Old World to the New," for which Charles Mackay wrote a number of songs, Mr. Russell composing the music. Those songs, or some of them, were: "The Parting Tear," "To the West! To the West!" "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," "Far, Far upon the Sea." On Henry Russell's second visit to Cork I sang and played those songs for him, and he presented to me a number of his compositions, with his autograph attached to each. Is it possible that the song I sang fifty long years ago is the song Mrs. Ellis wrote in 1883?

BOOKS.—ALL OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS SUPplied, no matter on what subject; write me stating books wanted; I can get you any book ever published; when in England call and inspect my stock of 50,000 rare books. Baker's Great Book Shop, John Bright Street, Birmingham, England.

EDWARD RANKLE, West Hoboken, N. J.—"W. H." wishes information concerning James Hungerford, author of "The Old Plantation." Hungerford was born and reared amid the scenes described in his book, and was for some time Principal of a school somewhere in Maryland. He was a poet of considerable ability and well known in Baltimore literary circles, being for a time associated with Prof. T. H. Hewitt in the publication of "The Minerva," a literary venture of much merit, and numbering among his friends many well-known writers, notably Edgar Allan Poe, the Rev. John N. McJilton, R. Shelton Mackenzie, James R. Brewer, Henry B. Hirst, J. A. Houston, and others. Many articles from his pen appeared at various times in The Telegram, Baltimore; Baltimorean, Saturday Night, Southern Society, Southern Home Circle, and a number of New York and Philadelphia papers. His writings bore a marked resemblance to the literary style of R. Shelton Mackenzie.

E. E. P., New York—Kindly state what the so-called "third degree" in police proceedings consists of. Has there ever been such a thing?

The "third degree" is practically the mental torture by the police of a criminal; its form changes with each application. Judge Clearwater, formerly of the Supreme Court of this State, declares that the "third degree" is inflicted daily.

R. A. S. P., Brunswick, Me.—A. J. B., Melrose, Mass., will find "Hame, hame, hame" in "Echoes from Home," published by Lee & Shepard in 1870. I will send a copy of the poem if desired.

Other friends give the same information. As we understand the question, "A. J. B." does not want Cunningham's poem, but wishes to know the name of the book which ends with his poem "My Ain Countrie."

N. W. H., Flushing, N. Y.—Can you tell me the author of a poem on Mistress Penelope Penwick, called "Sweet P——," who caused the capture of some British officers whom Washington was trying to elude? I believe she offered to dance with them if they would lay aside their swords, which they did, and so were defenseless when the American soldiers rushed in.

The author is Virginia Woodward Cloud; the poem was published first a number of years ago.

W. G. R., Woodbury, Conn.—In answer to the inquiry of "R. O." of March 10 I submit the following quotation from Stretch's "Beauties of History": "A memorable practice of Vespasian, the Roman Emperor, throughout the course of his whole life, was he called himself to account every night for the actions of the past day; and as often as he had found he had slipped any one day without doing some good he entered upon his diary this memorial, perdidi diem—I have lost a day."

W. J., New York—The quotation asked for by Mrs. A. E. Story, Clay Centre, Kan., "Slumber not in the tents of your fathers; the world advances; advance with it," is in my scrapbook and there ascribed to Mazzini. I believe the context may be found in a recently published life of that statesman.

A. M. BACON—Can you tell me where this sentence comes from, as it does not seem to be in the Concordance or Proverbs: "Better is an handful with quietness than two handfuls with labor and striving after wind."

The idea of this pseudo-proverb is old; it is in the Bible, (Proverbs xv., 17;) in Shakespeare, (I. Henry IV., Act III., Scene 1, Line 161,) and in some form or other in every language.

L. N. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.—Can you explain to us the meaning of John Hay's poem, "On Pitz Languard?" Who or what were the three voices?

The poem is of the ordinary variety; every young poet turns out something of the same sort. As we interpret it, the poet thinks he hears the voices of the girls he has been fond of. One of the girls had kissed him, and presumably committed suicide; a second had loved him, but married another; he had married a girl, but found he loved another, and the voices that he heard were imaginary.

J. A., New Haven, Conn.—Will you be good enough to tell me if there be in the fourth version of the Rubaiyat any quatrain corresponding to XLV. of the first version; also if XXXVII. (1st) corresponds to LVII. of the fourth, in your judgment, and if LX. of the first is composed of LXXXIII. and LXXXVII. of fourth?

The forty-fifth quatrain of the first edition disappears entirely from the fourth edition; the thirty-seventh of the first does not correspond to the fifty-seventh of the fourth, though the fourth line of the latter is the third of the former; the eighty-seventh of the fourth is another form of the sixtieth of the first; the eighty-third is not.

O. G., New York.—While I was very well acquainted with Gus Phillips for a number of years, and heard him recite all of his poems, I do not think they were ever published in book form. They were, however, frequently printed in The Evening Telegram.

JOHN C. DOUGLAS.—Some one on March 3 requested the authorship of the lines:

"Wise were the Kings who never chose a friend,
Till with full cuts they had unmasked his soul,
And seen the bottom of his deepest thoughts."

M. E. S.—In Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" I find the passage:

"It is a wise father that knows his own child."

It is said by Launcelot to his father in Act II., Scene 2. Did this saying originate with Shakespeare? It sounds like a verse from the Bible, but I have failed to find it there.

This form of the saying appears to be original with Shakespeare; the usual form is: "It is a wise child that knoweth his own father." This real form is said to be found in the Odyssey.

J. O. TRYON, New York.—The poem, "In a Rose Garden," by John Bennett, which F. E. Gen. Rochester, N. Y., asks for, was published in The Chap Book Oct. 1, 1895.

M. W. A., Essex Fells, N. J.—I should appreciate the favor if you would give a brief sketch of Cy Warman and a list of his books.

Cy Warman was born at Greenup, Ill., in 1855, and was educated at the common schools; was farmer, wheat broker, machinist, fireman, engineer, editor; wrote poetry and became a journalist. In 1892 married his second wife, the original of the song "Sweet Marie," which he wrote. He has traveled abroad, lived in Washington, and now lives in London, Ontario. His books are: "Tales of an Engineer," "The Express Messenger," "Frontier Stories," "The Story of the Railroad," "The White Mail," "Snow on the Headlight," "Short Rails," "The Waking Empire of the North," "The Last Spike."

H. E. M., Boston.—Your correspondent "M. S. R. W." doubtless refers to the book, "When It Was Dark," by Guy Thorne, published two years ago by the Putnams.

H. R. D., Anaconda, Mont.—Is the description of the dwelling place of the Grendal in "Beowulf," which Stopford Brooke quotes in his primer of English Literature, which begins, his own translation? If not, whose is it? And where may I obtain the book?

"Dark is the land

It seems to be his own translation; he changes it in his "English Literature." Most of the translations of Beowulf are in prose. Brooke translated only the portions of Beowulf that he quoted.

JOHN RUSKIN.

Lectures and Notes Hitherto Semi-Available in the Cook-Wedderburn Edition.*

WITH the publication of the twentieth volume in The Library Edition of the complete works of the great art critic, John Ruskin, comes the announcement that the issue will consist of thirty-seven and not thirty-three volumes, as had originally been planned. Paradoxical as it may seem, the contents of the new volume, with the exception of the inaugural "Lecture on Art," are probably much more familiar to American students of Ruskin than they are to his own admiring countrymen. The reason is this: The "Lectures on Art," which opened the Slade Professorship at Oxford in February and March, 1870, were almost immediately published by the University Press and widely circulated. But not so with the second series, which deal with sculpture. That was retained by the author until presented in an expensive and limited edition with the title, "Aratra Pentelici." This work was "pirated" in America, and has since been enjoyed by a large student public.

These two series of lectures make up the volume at hand, together with three generous appendices consisting of material for additional lectures on Greek art and mythology composed at about the same time. "The Story of Arachne," being a lecture delivered at Woolwich, Dec. 13, 1870; "The Tortoise of Aegina," an undelivered lecture in continuation of "Aratra Pentelici;" "The Riders of Tarentum," and "The Eagle of Elis," together with notes for intended lectures in the same connection. In exposition of these themes and in description of the circumstances in which they were inspired, conceived, or given publicity, we have some interesting introductory pages apropos of Ruskin's life at Oxford in the early seventies, written by E. T. Cook, who, with the admirable collaboration of Alexander Wedderburn, has made the Library Edition not only a valuable collection of Ruskin's works, but also a biography of the first order. Like all the Ruskiniana coming from Mr. Cook's pen, these pages are sensible, sympathetic, and sensitive and absolutely free from the taint of exaggerated hero-worship to which so many of Ruskin's disciples, not excepting even the judicious Mr. Collingwood, have been addicted. A word may be added here concerning the illustrations. Whether wood engravings or photogravures, they certainly pay worthy pictorial tribute to the text which they elucidate.

NOW, what in Mr. Cook's judgment was Ruskin's attitude toward the academic instruction of art as revealed by the critic's acceptance of the Slade Professorship? The revolution in art wrought by the Pre-Raphaelites twenty years before, the fulminations of which were still resounding in the studies of Chelsea, had scarcely disturbed the pedantic atmosphere of Oxford. And a more painful example of British academic conservatism is not to be found beyond the fact that Ruskin, with all his charm of personality, imagery of speech and depth of knowledge pertaining to the origin of the arts of expression, did not do more than ruffle the mental attitude of this ancient academy. He made disciples in abundance who were to go out into the world and fight for his principles, and accomplish much in expressing his ideals. He made scarcely any impression on the authorities which was to result in choosing an advanced man for his successor. Possibly had his health permitted he might have succeeded in implanting there an aesthetic influence which would have found fuller, more practical expression in the choice of his successor, but it was not to be. Still, a careful examination of his work as Slade Professor reveals the fact that he might have accomplished much more than he did if he had only conformed to the principles of routine work. He lost much influence with the authorities through exalting the false principle that occasion and transitory inspiration were superior to constant and concentrated and regulated labor.

THAT Ruskin failed, he himself acknowledges in his preface to the 1887 edition of his "Lectures on Art." But he lays the blame upon the brief period of his professorship—five years. While admitting that he might have accomplished more in that period had he made the necessary concessions to conservatism, there is scarcely any doubt that he would have produced the change for which he sought in his own way and by his own individuality had his tenure been longer. How he would have accomplished this—after, as a prophet of a new art creed, he had demonstrated his mission—by training a corps of assistants, by making the art treasures of the galleries available for intelligent examination, he has placed on record in the volume before us. Then as now this record is of vital importance to those concerned in imparting instruction on all that pertains to the arts of expression.

COMMON SENSE GARDENS
By Cornelius V. V. Sewell

The author maintains that the flower garden is one of the most important rooms of the house, and that the planning and planting of it should be carried out under the personal supervision of the owner, and should reflect his or her individuality as much as the library or drawing room. The book aims to help the owners of small country places to lay out their grounds and make their gardens in an inexpensive as well as effective way.

THE WILL OF A PEOPLE

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE—ITS HISTORY. By John H. Hazelton. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $4.50.

MOST histories of the American Revolution have comparatively little to say about the history of the movement for independence. The reader is apt to surmise that Congress was led to declare it at the instigation of the ultra radicals; that it was their act rather than the deliberately expressed will of the American people.

Indeed, independence was a plant of sudden growth. With a few possible exceptions, we may safely say that nobody considered it likely until Lexington and Concord. A handful of Massachusetts radicals, led by Sam Adams, was the exceptions. A great change in public opinion was wrought between the Summer of 1775 and that of 1776. The reader of Mr. Hazelton's excellent account—consisting largely of extracts from contemporary sources—will conclude that Paine's "Common Sense" had a tremendous effect in popularizing independence. In this pamphlet many found their thoughts expressed and formulated. The radicals were emboldened and the waverers won over. Contemporary documents bear evidence of the tremendous effect produced by Paine's arguments. It is amusing to see John Adams, who admitted the value of "Common Sense," take the credit to himself by saying that it merely contained a summary of the arguments he had been repeating again and again in Congress.

North Carolina was the first Colony to authorize her delegates to concur with the delegates of other Colonies in declaring independence, and Virginia was the first to authorize her delegates to propose it. The first action in Congress was the well-known resolution offered by Richard Henry Lee, "that these united Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States."

John Adams tells us why Jefferson was chosen to draft the Declaration. "There were more reasons than one. Mr. Jefferson had the reputation of a masterly pen; he had been chosen a delegate in Virginia in consequence of a very handsome public paper which he had written for the House of Burgesses. * * * Another reason was that Mr. Richard Henry Lee was not beloved by the most of his colleagues from Virginia, and Mr. Jefferson was set up to rival and supplant him."

There seems to have been a good deal of petty jealousy among the leaders in Congress. Speaking of Jefferson's Declaration, Adams writes to Pickering: "As you justly observe, there is not an idea in it but what had been hackneyed in Congress for two years before." What had Congress had to say about the "Inalienable Rights of Man?" Jefferson, too, showed unworthy pique when he sought, later in life, to discredit the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence of 1775.

Mr. Hazelton's work is the result of patient and laborious investigation, set forth without any effort to attain literary attractiveness. It is valuable for a correct understanding of one important phase of the Revolution. There is an elaborate appendix, and many interesting fac similes, including Jefferson's rough draft of the Declaration.

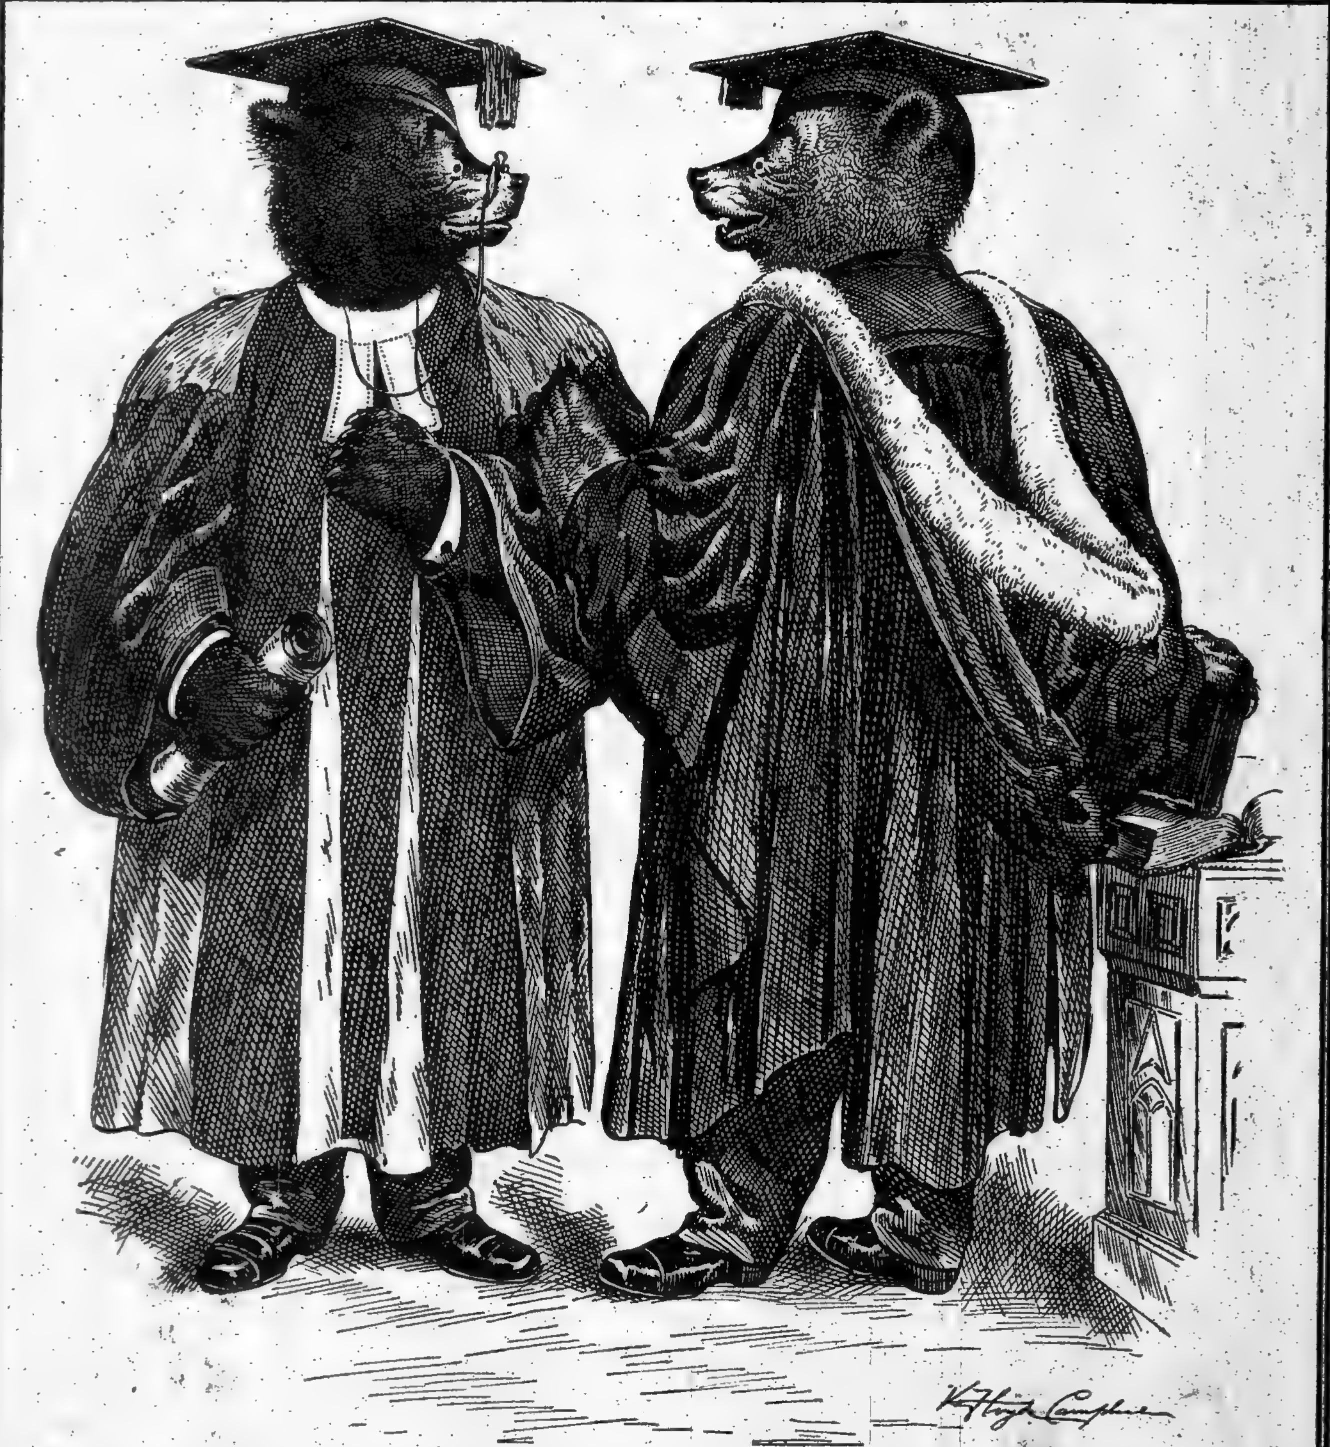
THE ROOSEVELT BEARS

BY PAUL PIPER.

ILLUSTRATED BY V. FLOYD CAMPBELL.



"These gowns and caps and scrolls you see we give you now as your degree:
A double-L-D to TEDDY—B and a D and two L's to TEDDY—G."

Two Harvard boys took the bears that night
To their college rooms to coach them right,
And get them ready for their degree:
An L or two and a great big D.
They dressed the bears like monks of old
With robes and hoods and cords of gold,
With little caps which stuck on tight
And made two bald spots round and white;
And a massive book for TEDDY—B,
And a long crooked staff for TEDDY—G.

The bears then marched in solemn tread,
From hall to hall, the boys ahead,
To a chamber of horrors where degrees are made
By a sophomore class in masquerade.
The hall was ready when the bears got there,
With the master coach in a big arm chair,
And a score of boys in gowns of green,
The queerest crowd they had ever seen;
Each with helmet, shield and spear,
And flowing beard like old King Lear.

The master coach, in a crimson cloak,
Stood up in front and thus he spoke:
"Two hairy bears from the woolly West
Are here to-night to take our test;
To ride our goat and pay the fee
Which admits them to our society.
These score of tutors well versed in views
Will put you through your P's and Q's,
And when you've passed and paid your fees
They'll report you ready for your degrees.
If the belted knights will bring in the lamb
The bears can take their first exam."

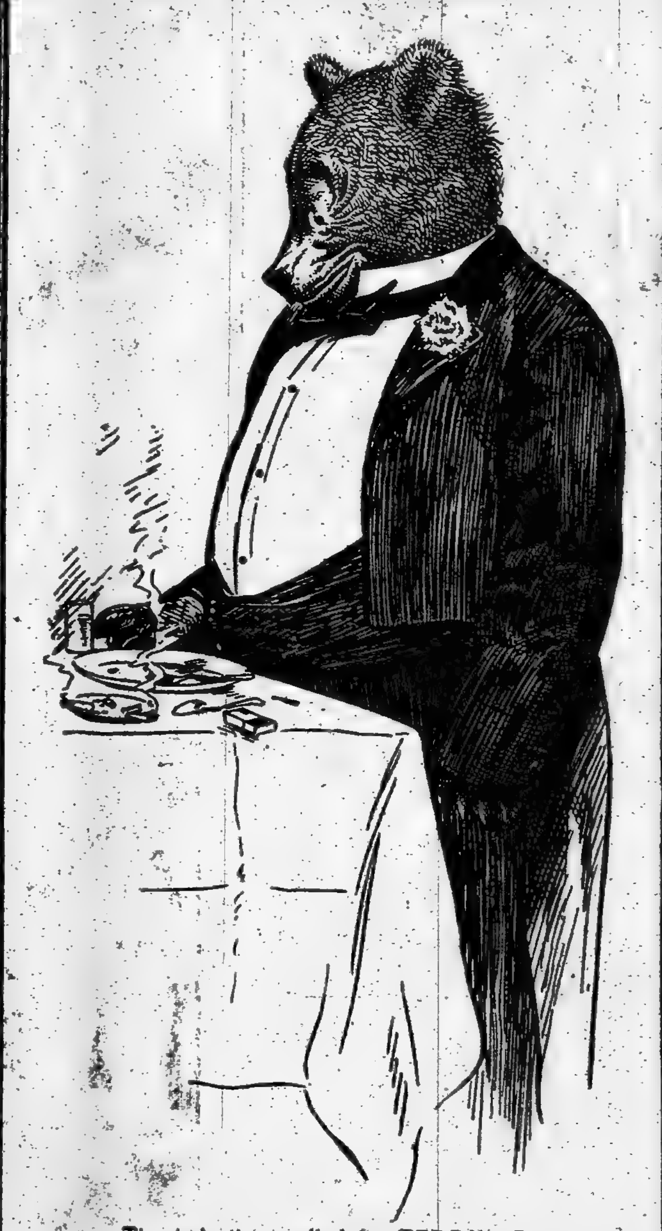
Rang one to twelve, the midnight hour.
The hall was hushed as still as night,
And the shadows made by candle light
Of moving figures here and there
Gave a shivery feeling to the air.

The lamb brought in by the belted knights
Was the hero of a hundred fights:
A donkey mascot hard to ride,
And full to the brim of kick beside,
And mad all through as hatters six
To be waked at night for students' tricks.
The master coach said to TEDDY—B,
"To ride this donkey which you see
Is your first exam for a degree;
You must ride together without a fall
Three times around this assembly hall."

While TEDDY—G with record book
Put down the marks which each one took.
When the exam was through each sophomore
Had a dozen corners good and sore.
Then TEDDY—B gave up the key,
And said, "Bring on your next degree."



The lads then called for TEDDY—G:
"I'm not a talker, much," said he.

ANTI-AMERICAN MOVE PLANNED BY THE KAISER

SEEKS DOMINGAN NAVAL BASE

Emperor Does Not Want the Pan-American Congress to Precede The Hague Meeting.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Disappointed in his hope of gaining a naval station in Morocco, the German Emperor is planning to make his next spectacular demonstration across the Atlantic in Santo Domingo. This is the expressed view of a high Washington official.

The State Department has not yet recovered from its surprise at Baron Rosen's sudden announcement of Russia's purpose to set the date of The Hague Conference for early in July instead of late in the Autumn, as originally planned. The new date would conflict with the date set for the Pan-American Congress at Rio Janeiro, July 21. This congress was to be assembled for the purpose, among other things, of submitting certain questions to The Hague.

Russia's move is ascribed to manipulation by Germany. The Kaiser would evade discussion or recognition by The Hague of the doctrine of caveat emptor for South America, forbidding hereafter the forcible collection of debts by foreign nations, which Secretary Root hoped formally to present to The Hague Conference as the sense of the Congress of all the Americas.

The "developed" Calvo or Drago doctrine, so-called, has been approved by the Administration as the means of finally settling such foreign complications as are now troubling Santo Domingo. It is believed that Emperor William, by his influence with German bankers and by his present official disapproval of the advancing of money by them for the flotation of Russia's immense loans, seeks to bend Russian diplomacy to the accomplishment of his design of staving off, if possible, discussion at The Hague of the question of customs seizures on this side of the Atlantic. Should the Senate reject the Santo Domingo treaty, says the high authority mentioned, we may expect the next outbreak from the Kaiser in the Western Hemisphere.

Casablanca, Emperor William's objective in Morocco, would have furnished a naval station a good way on the route from Germany to the West Indies. If by force, intimidation, and chicane the Kaiser might succeed in establishing a second naval base in Santo Domingo, German fleets would command Panama and ultimately the Pacific, would protect German colonial expansion, and would dictate the destinies of South America. Acting ostensibly on behalf of the various groups of foreign creditors, Germany might take advantage of Santo Domingo's chaotic internal state, give the insurgents control of the Government, and take a town as the price of intercession.

Foiled of Casablanca, the Emperor's impulse, it is said, is to leap the Atlantic at a bound. Of course he could not expect to set a naval base so close to our shores without inviting war with the United States. Nevertheless, it is asserted, this is the problem with which our Government may soon be confronted.

Secretary Root is resolved not to consent to the assembling of The Hague Conference earlier than October, the time of his return from Rio. It is announced to-day that the State Department has suggested to the Russian Government through Ambassador Rosen that the period suggested in the Russian note for the meeting of the conference would be inconvenient to the United States and to some of the other countries of this hemisphere which had expected to be represented at The Hague.

The State Department has not yet suggested another date for The Hague Conference, but it is probable that this will follow later, after other powers invited to the conference have had an opportunity to express their desires as to the programme and the date, for in this matter all stand on an equal footing.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 7.—The full text of the Russian note to the powers on the subject of the second Peace Conference at The Hague as published here gives the Czar full credit for the initiative, not mentioning President Roosevelt's preliminary step in this direction.

The introduction to the document is in striking contrast to the invitation to the original conference of 1898, which pointed out how the increasingly expensive armaments were weighing down the various nations and threatening the world with a gigantic catastrophe, and made a noble appeal for general disarmament in order to substitute for the era of armed peace an era of peace based upon the settlement of international disputes by the justice of arbitration. Not only does the second invitation not press the idea of disarmament, but it distinctly excludes it from consideration, and only presents as a programme for discussion the questions raised by the Russo-Japanese war, "without touching on questions relating to the limitation of the naval and land forces."

With reference to the objection of the United States to the date set by Russia for the conference, it is pointed out that an earlier date would clash with the Red Cross Conference at Geneva, and that the meeting place of the peace conference must be free in September for the States General. It is believed here that a postponement of the conference until 1907 would disappoint the powers.

GOVERNMENT JOBS REFUSED

RINK AND GARAGE AFIRE.

St. Nicholas Rink in Danger Early This Morning.

Three alarms were turned in on a fire which started at 1:30 o'clock this morning in the automobile establishment of George Coles in Sixty-seventh Street near Columbus Avenue.

The garage is next to Healey's restaurant, the St. Nicholas Rink, and to several other automobile places. The Columbia Storage Warehouse is also near. All these places were believed to be in danger.

The firemen feared that the naphtha in the automobile place would explode.

The fire was spectacular, the flames shooting to a great height. There was a little scare in the dining room of Healey's several guests rushing to the street. Some, however, remained at the tables.

A good deal of smoke got into the restaurant. At 2 A. M. the St. Nicholas Skating Rink was thought to be catching fire.

Soon after 2 o'clock the fire seemed to be in St. Nicholas Rink. It had evidently originated, however, in the garage, which is in the same large building as the rink proper. The fire was then spreading.

$17,000 GOLD BAR GONE.

Box Opened Between Guiana and New York—Steel Bar Substituted.

A bar of gold bullion weighing 850 ounces, which means 70 pounds and 10 ounces as the goldsmith measures, or 53 pounds and 2 ounces as the butcher chops off steak, was stolen in shipment between Georgetown, British Guiana, and New York City. The bar was worth $17,000 and was consigned to the British Guiana Gold Concessions Company, Limited, with offices in the Mills Building.

The discovery of the theft was made on Friday, shortly after the steamship which had the bullion in trust reached port. As soon as the consignee learned that the gold was missing the Pinkerton National Detective Agency was called in, and a dozen men are now at work trying to solve the mystery of the lost gold.

The bullion was placed in a strongbox and put aboard the steamship Karoma of the Quebec Steamship Company. The bullion was in one bar when it was placed aboard the steamship at Georgetown, according to the local officials of the mining company, but when the box in which it was shipped reached the offices of the company Friday afternoon it was empty. In place of the bar was found a piece of steel, evidently a fragment of a machine of some sort.

When the box arrived at the offices of the company there were present C. Van Rensselaer Cogswell, the Secretary and a Director of the company, and Donald McLane, the company's attorney.

The box appeared to be in perfect order. The seals, which were quite numerous, seemed to be undisturbed. The only thing which appeared unusual about the consignment was its weight.

The truckman who carted the box to the Mills Building did not have much trouble in handling it. The box should have been heavy. Much to the surprise of the recipients, it was so light that the truckman carried it in his arms with perfect ease.

While the weight of the box indicated that there was something wrong, the seals were perfect. When the box was opened there was revealed in the sawdust, not the large gold bar which was expected, but a rather small bar or block of steel.

A close inspection of the box was then made. It developed that the seals on the bottom of the box had been broken and a small board removed. After taking out the gold bar the thieves had substituted the piece of steel, regardless of the difference in weight.

Immediately after the facts were ascertained Mr. Cogswell called up the Custom House on the telephone. Customs Inspector Worthington visited the office and looked over the box. On it he found the seal of the Customs Inspectors, which was affixed when the box landed here.

The shipping agent of the Quebec Steamship Company is the firm of Outerbridge & Co. Attorney Mynderse, of the law firm of Butler, Notman & Mynderse, said to-day that a very thorough investigation is being conducted by private detectives in addition to the Pinkerton agency.

The mining company will not lose anything by the theft inasmuch as the steamship company is held responsible. The steamship company, in turn, is insured against theft by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company.

INDICT LODGE'S SECRETARY?

He Is Accused of Concealing a $200 Campaign Contribution.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 7.—An indictment against Robert G. Proctor, private secretary to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, is reported to have been found to-day as the result of the efforts of District Attorney John B. Moran. A warrant, it is sserted, has been issued for Proctor's rest. It is said he is on his way to Bos[illegible]n from Washington.

The charge against Proctor was made by John G. Bestgen, who alleged that he gave Proctor $200 for the Republican Campaign Committee, and the sum did not appear in the published list of campaign contributions, as required by law. Bestgen said that he was endeavoring, through Proctor, to get an appointment as Consul to Solingen, Germany.

Chairman Talbot and other officers of the Republican committee appeared before the Grand Jury with their books.

OBJECTS TO HER HOUSE.

J. J. Emery Says It Spoils His View—

ASHES FROM VESUVIUS OVERWHELM A TOWN

Bosco Trecase Destroyed—Ottajano Being Evacuated.

LAVA RAZING HOMESTEADS

Duke of Aosta and Cardinal Prisco Try to Comfort the Peasants—Earthquake Shocks Grow Stronger.

NAPLES, April 7.—Bosco Trecase, on the southern declivity of Mount Vesuvius, has been transformed into a gray island of ruin by the ashes from the crater of the volcano.

Torrents of liquid fire, resembling in the distance serpents with glittering yellow and black scales, coursed in all directions, amid rumblings, detonations, and earth tremblings, while a pall of sulphurous smoke that hovered over all made breathing difficult.

The streams of lava were resistless. They snapped like pipestems the trunks of chestnut trees hundreds of years old and blighted with their torrid breath the blooms on the peach trees before the trees themselves had been reached. They razed the homes of the peasants, filled up the wells, and then continued their course down the mountainside.

Artillery carts have been sent to the assistance of the fleeing peasants. The Duke of Aosta, Cardinal Joseph Prisco, and various officials to-day went to the portions of the mountain most threatened in order to succor and comfort the people. Previously Cardinal Prisco had ordered special prayers to be said for those in danger. Bosco Reale, the village which is now in most danger of destruction, is the birthplace of the Cardinal and the home of most of his relatives.

The Cardinal and the Duke talked with the peasants and tried to pacify them. The Duke was especially active. He explained the means he thought best to save lives and property and had the engineers and soldiers erect parapets and dig trenches in order to change the course of the lava streams, at times working himself. Cardinal Prisco distributed necessaries of life to the peasants, and even went so far as to give away the rings he wore on his fingers. Repeatedly he exclaimed to the frightened peasants, "Pray, my children; you may be sure God will not desert you."

The statue of St. Anne which was taken to the mountain side to confront the lava, was frequently moved backward as the tide advanced.

Considerable apprehension is felt because of the earthquake shocks, which are growing stronger and are felt even at Castellamare, fifteen miles southeast of this city. Each shock is accompanied by deep and prolonged detonations.

Ottajano, at the northeast foot of the mountain, is threatened by a stream of lava and the people are beginning to desert the town.

The populace of Torre dell'Annunziata, at the south foot, have requested that night trains be run to the town. This request has been granted and trains are now ready to proceed thither in case of need.

It is estimated that 2,000 acres of land under cultivation have been destroyed by the eruption.

Signor Matteucci, director of the observatory on Mount Vesuvius, still continues to occupy a most dangerous position. With him is an American engineer named Perret.

New craters have opened at different points on the mountain, but it is impossible to ascertain their number or where they are situated.

There have been no fatalities at Bosco Trecase or elsewhere as a result of the eruption. The Duchess of Aosta visited Bosco Trecase to-day.

The flow of lava was stationary at 10 o'clock to-night.

ROME, April 7.—It is asserted that King Victor Emmanuel has expressed his intention of visiting the afflicted districts on Mount Vesuvius.

According to other rumors, which it has been impossible to verify, Pope Pius is desirous of taking this opportunity to break his voluntary imprisonment at the Vatican and go among the sufferers.

Bosca Trecase was the usual starting point for tourists who wished to make the ascent of Mount Vesuvius from the south side. It had a population of 9,000.

The cemetery of Bosco Trecase was invaded by a lava stream on Friday and the inhabitants began to abandon the town the same day.

FIRE IN SUB-POST OFFICE.

Fire was discovered in the basement of the six-story brick building at 25 Third Avenue last night, and a small quantity of mail was damaged in Post Office Sub-Station D, which occupies the ground floor of the building. About $8,000 damage was done by the flames, which burned out the cellar and destroyed the letter carriers' room.

About forty men were working with the mail when Assistant Chief Clerk Sulzman came running up from the basement yelling "Fire!" Smoke came pouring upstairs, and the clerks and carriers hurriedly threw some of the mail into some forty bags and ran with them to the street. Under the supervision of Assistant Postmaster Morgan and Chief Clerk Hyland every bit of mail, except a few incoming pieces, was taken from the building. Within an hour the fire was extinguished, with little damage to the sub-station.

Sub-Station D is one of the busiest in the city, taking in the district from Twentieth Street to East Houston, east of Fourth Avenue. The pneumatic tube connecting with the General Post Office was not harmed by the fire.

Upstairs over the Post Office is a United States Army recruiting office. There were ten new accessions to the army sleeping there when the smoke aroused them. They scrambled into their clothes and went downstairs, where they joked each other about being under fire sooner than they had expected. The origin of the blaze is unknown.

AUTOIST AGAINST AUTOIST.

H. H. Bingham Has a Chauffeur Arrested in Riverside Avenue.

Believing that all automobile owners should have any person they see operating a machine arrested, Herbert H. Bingham of 731 St. Nicholas Avenue, the owner of a number of machines, caused the arrest yesterday afternoon of William J. Wagner, 26 years old, of 144 West Sixty-fourth Street, who said he was employed by the Singer Sewing Machine Company.

At the time of Wagner's arrest he was driving a large touring car up Riverside Avenue at a high rate of speed. Bingham said he was driving the car recklessly and endangering the lives of persons in carriages by crossing from one side of the street to the other as he sped along.

Bingham was in a light wagon when he saw Wagner. He called Mounted Policeman Daly, who caught up with the automobilist at Ninety-sixth Street and Riverside Avenue. The chauffeur was taken to the West 100th Street Station and held on the charge of reckless driving. Later he was released on cash bail of $100 furnished by H. C. Esselstyn of the American Automobile Storage Company of 56 West Sixtieth Street.

BARRELS AND BOTTLES FLEW.

Truck Smash-Up on Bridge—Bottles from Window Into Bridge Crowd.

Trolley Car 512 of the Putnam Avenue line was on its way to Brooklyn on the bridge at 5 o'clock last evening, when a truck loaded with barrels was struck by the car and given a boost that almost sent it into the river.

When the crash came the truck was sent into the air and whirled around so that one of the wheels landed on the high steel girder rail which skirts the roadway. The team drawing the truck was sent flying fifty feet along the roadway and fell in a heap of broken barrels. Samuel King, the driver of the truck, was thrown to the roadway, but landed on his feet and escaped injury. It required half an hour to clear away the wreckage.

The débris blocked the trolley tracks for a hundred feet and choked off traffic on the bridge trolleys from 5:12 o'clock until after 6. The blockade sent a stream of men and women to the bridge cars, and it required the efforts of the entire bridge reserve squad to straighten out the tangle. The truck, which was owned by McPartland Brothers of 68 Beach Street, was badly damaged.

About this time some one threw an empty beer bottle from The World Building. The bottle just missed the head of a one-legged newsboy. When it smashed in pieces on the stone pavement hundreds of men and women were near by, but no one was hit. Policeman Schilp started to investigate, when a second and a third bot-

FIGHT WITH HIGHWAYMEN IN WEST 72D STREET

Automobile Searchlight Illumines Battle on House Steps.

TWO ATTACKED BY THUGS

Four Plain-Clothes Men Called by Telephone Have a Hard Tussle with Robbers.

Four policemen of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, who went to the rescue of a hold-up victim in response to a telephone call, had the fight of their lives with two highwaymen in West Seventy-second Street, last night. Two of the policemen were badly hurt in the encounter. They made prisoners of the highwaymen finally, and took them to the police station in the patrol wagon. The fight took place in the glare of an automobile searchlight, and was witnessed by scores of residents of Seventy-second Street and West End Avenue.

William E. Volhart of 256 West Seventy-second Street and William P. Langevin of 102 West Eighty-first Street were walking along West End Avenue, near Seventy-second Street, when they were stopped by two men, one of whom asked Volhart for a match. He replied that he had none, whereupon the man made a grab for his diamond scarf pin. The other attacked Langevin, who knocked his hat off.

The men who had been attacked turned and ran toward Volhart's home in Seventy-second Street, their assailants at their heels. Volhart ran into the house to telephone for the police, while Langevin made his stand on the steps and fought the highwaymen with his cane.

The fight was being unequally waged when Murtha, Levins, Lynch, and Storer, plain-clothes men of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, arrived. Just as they got there Langevin was on the point of giving up the battle. A crowd had begun to gather, and the occupants of an automobile, their curiosity aroused at a disturbance unusual in that neighborhood, stopped the machine and turned it so that the circle of light from a powerful searchlight was thrown on the combatants.

The policemen, who had no nightsticks, sprang into the fray with their pistols as clubs. The preliminary blows were ineffectual, and the highwaymen, both powerful men, seemed able to withstand the combined onslaught of the four policemen with ease.

No words were spoken, but the six struggled back and forth between the steps of the house and the gutter. Langevin was too spent to offer any assistance, and that proffered by the occupants of the automobile was respectfully declined by the police.

"We can do this bunch; I think we ought to—two to one," panted one of them.

"They did 'do' them, but it took a long while. When the patrol wagon arrived in response to a second notification from the field of battle, four weary policemen were sitting on two badly battered highwaymen in the gutter. Murtha was suffering from the effect of several kicks, and his clothes were torn, while Levins was badly bruised.

The two men said they were Patrick Cosgrove of 247 West Sixty-sixth Street, and George Wilson of 304 West Sixty-ninth Street. Each declared that he was but 17 years old. The police did not believe them, saying that no two mere boys could fight like a dozen full-grown men.

"That was the worst tussle I ever had in my life, Sarge," said Murtha.

"I wish I'd had a gun," said Cosgrove to Murtha. "I'd have blown yer roof off."

TROLLEY CRASH ON CURVE.

Five Hurt When Long Island City Cars Collide—One May Die.

Two trolley cars collided last night at the junction of Vernon and Jackson Avenues, on the New York & Queens County trolley road in Long Island City, resulting in the injury of five persons. The most seriously hurt was Theodore Hobart, 31 years old, of 277 Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, who suffered an injury to the skull and internal injuries. He was taken to St. John's Hospital unconscious. His condition is critical.

The accident occurred shortly after 5 o'clock, when traffic was heavy. Trolley cars 271 and 261 left the Long Island City ferry house packed to the doors. Car 271 was in charge of Motorman McGuire and Conductor Metzer.

Harry Savage was the motorman on Car 261. Both cars were within a short distance of each other, and both were going at a fair rate of speed. As McGuire neared the junction of Vernon and Jackson Avenues he slowed down to round the curve at that place. Savage either lost control of his car or the brake refused to work, and his car crashed into the rear end of the one operated by McGuire.

The collision threw all the passengers off their feet and caused a panic in both cars. Many of the passengers were cut by flying glass or trampled in the rush to get out.

The new supply will be on sale beginning to-morrow.

Postmaster Willcox expresses the hope that the new stamps will stick better.

275 TELEPHONES BURNED OUT

Blaze in a Conduit Destroys Service of Broadway Hotels.

Fire in a manhole of the New York Telephone conduit at Thirty-fifth Street and Sixth Avenue at noon yesterday put out of service wires running to 275 telephones and affecting the Broadway hotels, as well as the ferries at West Twenty-third Street and Thirty-fourth Street. They were in working order again last night.

How the fire started is not known.

Mrs. Nellie Morrisey, 37 years old, was struck and instantly killed at New Rochelle last night while trying to save her two children from death in front of an express train on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

Mrs. Morrisey, who lived in the country, had been in New Rochelle shopping and was returning home. She lifted her two little daughters from one track and stepped in front of a Boston express.

She was hurled down an embankment. The children escaped uninjured.

CHOIR BOYS GO ON STRIKE.

Jealous Because Voice of Girl in Tremont Church Choir Was Praised.

Some of the music may have to be omitted from the services at the Tremont Methodist Episcopal Church, at 178 Washington Avenue, to-day, as the forty choir boys have gone on strike. The boys reported to the Choirmaster, Frank White, for rehearsal last Thursday, but as soon as the roll had been called they stampeded, and have refused to enter the church since.

They tried to get the girls in the choir to leave with them, but only two or three were courageous enough to do so, and they changed their minds soon after. The cause of the strike is said to be jealousy on the part of the boys because a certain girl, who has a very beautiful voice, was receiving too much praise to suit them.

The Rev. A. E. Bennett, the pastor of the church, said that the trouble would soon blow over, and that the boys would think better of their action and return to the choir. He thinks they may even show up in time for the services to-day.

ODELL MAKES APPEAL FOR PARTY HARMONY

Urges Republicans to Face the Coming Crisis United.

ELSBERG GOING TO RETIRE

State Chairman Cheered at Dinner to the New York Senator, Who Gets a Loving Cup.

Ex-Gov. Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., Chairman of the Republican State Committee, made an appeal to his party last night to bury all differences and dissensions and get together in preparation for the Fall campaign.

Mr. Odell said that he had been subjected to a great deal of abuse lately, as others had been, but he for one was willing to waive all the malignance with which he had been treated and work with the rank and file of the organization for the good of the entire party. He expected every Republican to do the same, he said.

It was announced at the dinner that Senator Elsberg had determined not to be a candidate for re-election at the conclusion of his present term.

When State Chairman Odell rose to address the 500 guests from this city and up the State he was cheered.

"When I get ready to resign my present position," he said, "I hope I may do it with the same gracious honor with which Senator Elsberg has announced that he is to retire."

"Not this year for you," yelled several of the diners.

"I am somewhat envious," continued Mr. Odell, "because I must confess that apparently for some unexplained reason there does not seem to be the same unanimity outside as far as that event is concerned. [Laughter.] In my position I am reminded of a story told me the other day by one of my former Congressional colleagues. He was telling about an Englishman who had got into trouble and had lost caste with some of his friends. He was complaining.

"'Ayear ago,' he moaned, 'they called me "'andsome 'Arry with auburn hair." Now they call me "a red-headed lobster."'"

Talks of Loyalty.

"I came here to-night to join with you in doing honor to Senator Elsberg. There is no truer test of merit than the appreciation of one's neighbors. The attacks of the envious and the vicious are unavailing if we are certain of the loyalty of our friends. [Applause.] Differences may exist at times, but as long as they are dictated by honesty they are for the public good. Your distinguished guest helped in formulating those policies which have done much to perpetuate the Republican principles.

"Republicanism is synonymous with conservatism. The protection of vested rights has hitherto been the aim of Republican legislation. Our party has stood for liberty, prosperity, and the protection of the National honor and credit. Whenever there has been unrest it has been caused by disregard for these principles.

"Whatever may be this discontent," continued the speaker, "it is not a false statement to say that the world has advanced and that there is greater protection to individual rights than ever before in history. But, unfortunately, envy and disappointment cause us to forget at times and to mistake our public duties. The small mind is usually suspicious, but the judgment of the suspicious is valueless. Personal ambition may even cause us to disregard those agencies which make for progress and civilization.

"Ever since 1894 the Republican Party has been paramount in this State. As far as possible, it has legislated in a way to create popular approval. Organizations are necessary and their continuance should be a matter of concern to every loyal Republican. Unfortunately, successes bring with them rancor. They cause that unrest of which we complain. The skillful surgeon, however, never desires to amputate. Amputation is his last resort.

"It is far preferable to bind up the wound than to slash and cut the victim. [Applause.]

"No man is perfect. We all make mistakes, and unfortunately the thousand and one good things are often outweighed by the one mistake a man makes. Confession is at least the basis for forgiveness. No self-respecting man will cringe and crawl, neither will he suffer domination or criticism without hitting back. [Applause and cheers.]

Should Forget Differences.

"I make no selfish appeal to you, but, as a loyal Republican, interested in the future success of our party, I am led to say that it will soon be time for us to forget our past differences and make preparation for the struggle which is to confront us in the Fall, and which will produce a crisis such as we have not confronted in the past twenty years.

"I ask no Republican to do that which I am not willing to do myself. If self-sacrifice is necessary, I am ready to do my share toward restoring harmony in the Republican ranks."

"You are the coming man," cried one of the guests.

"I am prepared to do all I owe the Republican Party," concluded Gov. Odell, "whether in the ranks or at the head, and give it my unselfish devotion. I sound this note of warning to-night and ask the cordial co-operation of all Republicans toward that which shall end strife and again make our party the bulwark against those who would array the classes against the masses and who would seek to destroy honor to advance their own personal ambitions."

the dinner to be given to Senator Elsberg, but, as this is impossible, let me extend through you to him my warm good wishes. I have known Senator Elsberg a long time, and have always respected him and invited his friendship. While I was Governor he was in the State Senate, and he was one of the men upon whom I found myself steadily able to rely. He has been a good and an honorable public servant, and I wish him all good fortune in his career through life."

Letters of regret were also read from Secretary Root and Gov. Higgins, the latter saying of Senator Elsberg:

"His standards in character and ability are of the highest order."

The menu card contained, among other things, a record of Senator Elsberg's legislative career, and the receptacles in which ice cream were served were small green boxes bearing a miniature representation of an Interborough car, in recognition of Mr. Elsberg's rapid transit legislation activities.

"Here is Senator Elsberg's great achievement for rapid transit," observed Edward Lauterbach, as he received his ice cream. "Now I will introduce the Grady amendment." Facing Senator Grady, he emptied the box, and added: "I shall take the cream out of it."

Mr. Colby, in introducing Senator Elsberg, referred to the latter's record in "the dangerous and slippery arena of the Senate of the United States." Everybody laughed at the slip.

"It is an inadvertent prophecy," added Mr. Colby, "but, at that, I think the adjectives applied hold good."

Senator Elsberg, in a brief speech of thanks, said that nothing he had done through his eight years of work in the Senate had afforded him greater pleasure than that he had at all times maintained his self-respect.

"I am sincerely proud of the fact that I have not lost a friendship or forfeited the respect of any of my friends," he declared. "And I am infinitely prouder of the fact that I still maintain my self-respect and that is the highest reward that can come to any man.

"And I want to say right here," looking at Gov. Odell, who smiled, "a man can participate in machine politics and still remain a fairly respectable member of the community." The diners cheered this remark.

"Now, what I want to say in conclusion is that what we need in public life to-day is not the man of the highest attainments, intellectually or commercially, but the real need is for the man who is honest."

City Neglected, Says Ivins.

William M. Ivins complimented Senator Elsberg upon his Senatorial record, and then discussed the needs of New York City as relating to the general work of the Legislature. He said that there was apparently a disposition among the legislators from up the State to hold New York City in the light of a community of no great importance. The city's interests were in many instances not properly attended to by the Legislature at large, no matter how hard the delegation from Greater New York might work in its behalf. Mr. Ivins thought the Legislature ought to pay more attention to city matters and urged concert of action on the part of the Senators and Assemblymen from Greater New York.

A reporter, who was late for the dinner, passed word to Mr. Ivins that he wanted something of his speech.

"Can you give me 200 words of what you said about the local situation?" wrote the reporter.

"No, I can't write that much," wrote Mr. Ivins in reply. "I can express it in five: 'It is very much mixed.'"

Attorney General Mayer said he regretted deeply the intention of Senator Elsberg to retire. He added:

No Hayseeds Now, Says Mayer.

"At Albany it is experience that tells. When a man comes back after his term and seeks re-election, too often his constituents do not consider the services he has rendered, but mere local considerations. The new man that replaces him is overshadowed by a man from some little village who possesses the experience, for the lack of which nothing can compensate. It rather wearies me to hear the talk about hayseeds. There are none now in the State of New York. Men from every part of the State are in close touch with all that concerns every part of the domain.

"I am sorry Elsberg is leaving the Senate. He has been conscientious in the discharge of his duties, and he is a fine example of the American born and bred. I wish him all prosperity and that he may gain a seat on that bench which is the ambition of every New York lawyer."

Senator Brackett followed and said: "I come to make a report of the close relationship which has existed between your Senator and myself in the last eight years. If my language is perfervid, remember I am giving my reasons for loving him. He has always manifested that unbending honesty which characterizes a man who respects himself and his constituents. I do not allude to that form of honesty that can resist a bribe of vulgar money, but to the honesty that never considers whether a measure he thinks is right will affect his personal fortune or not.

"He has shown the highest degree of intelligence in handling questions that would tax the ability of any one to know how to decide.

"It has been said in Albany that certain people have acted according to a law higher than the State law, and have acquired immunity. I wish to denounce the doctrine, and declare that there is no higher law for insurance companies than any one else, and that we have a perfect right to legislate for them."

In answer to the applause that greeted the Rev. Dr. Slicer as he rose, he remarked that it was pleasant to be thus welcomed. He added laughingly that he had felt for some weeks that no decent person would speak to him. He praised the guest of the evening for his bills providing for the Children's Court and for stamping out the policy games. He went on:

Names Elsberg for U. S. Senate.

"He has learned that a porcupine is not a success as a pet and that to be wholly moral it is not necessary to be absolutely disagreeable. I will now speak with the spirit of prophecy. Senator Elsberg seems to me the natural candidate for those seats in the Senate of Washington that seem so nearly unoccupied."

Dr. Slicer went on to state his opinion that the questions interesting the American people were not matters of party or reform, but of development, and that the real problem to be considered now was how to absorb the hundreds of thousands that poured into our ports.

Senator Thomas F. Grady complained that he had sat for two mortal hours listening to a complete condemnation of his own political life, and took credit to himself for Senator Elsberg's success because he had sat beside him in the Senate for eight years.

"That is longer than I could get anybody else to sit beside me," he added, in an aside.

He concluded by paying a tribute to Senator Elsberg on behalf of the Democratic members of the Senate.

INSANE MAN MUCH BATTERED.

Coroner to Investigate Death of a Manhattan Hospital Patient.

Dr. Philip Smith, house surgeon at the Manhattan State Hospital for the Insane, at Ward's Island called on Coroner Harburger last night at 50 St. Mark's Place and submitted a statement of the remarkable case of a patient named Cornelio Cologero, who died at the hospital yesterday morning. The Coroner will have Coroners' Physician Philip O'Hanlon make an autopsy on the body this morning.

Cologero, who was insane, died of general paralysis, nephritis, heart disease, and eight broken ribs, according to Dr. Smith. He was admitted to the hospital Dec. 29, 1904. Of a very excitable and combative nature, according to the report, the patient engaged in quarrels with fellow-patients. On March 23 he was pushed down while marching in the yard, but arose and made no complaint. On March 29 he was pushed down again, this time down a flight of steps. Examination showed that he had suffered fracture of four ribs.

He was then put to bed, and the next day the discovery was made that the patient had also fractured four more ribs. He had never complained, the doctor declares. General paralysis, says the doctor, rendered the patient rather insensible to pain, and also "explains the ease with which his ribs were fractured."

Coroner Harburger said last night that the case looked very suspicious to him. The man's death was not reported in the regular way, and he did not hear of it until Dr. Smith reported it to him in person. He said he would subpoena all the keepers who had had anything to do with Cologero and the officials of the hospital, and would make a thorough investigation.

Alfred Robinson, 35 years old, an attendant in the Manhattan State Hospital for the Insane, was arrested yesterday, on complaint of Dr. Philip C. Washburn of the hospital staff, who charged that Robinson used brutality toward Gisisfi Misake, a Japanese patient.

Misake's nose was broken and he got a severe beating. Dr. Washburn called Policeman Meily, who took Robinson to the East 104th Street Station and locked him up on the charge of assault.

HIGGINS DEFENDS PARTY AT INVINCIBLES' DINNER

Praises 80-Cent Gas and Stock Transfer Levy.

MORTGAGE TAX LAW NOT HIS

He Urges Party Harmony and Says All Must Unite Against "the Common Enemy."

Gov. Higgins was the guest of honor last night at a dinner given by the Invincible Club in Brooklyn. The occasion was the club's eighteenth annual feast, but it was more in the nature of a harmony gathering of the warring factions in the Kings County Republican organization.

There were nearly five hundred men in the banquet room of Assembly Hall when Gov. Higgins entered, escorted by ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, at whose home he had spent the afternoon.

Gov. Higgins's address was practically a defense of Republicanism in the State.

"We are on the eve of another great contest for supremacy in the Empire State," said he. "Changing conditions have shifted the battle lines. We have won on the old issues, and our opponents will seek to force the fighting upon new ones. Excitement and unrest over revelations of lawless greed in high places are manifest everywhere. The time is drawing near when we must close up the ranks, map out our plan of battle, and go forth fearlessly against the common enemy."

The Governor went on to say that he did not believe a Democratic administration would reduce the cost of State Government, or repeal existing tax measures. The rapid increase in the expenses of municipal government in the city, and the growing city debt, furnished indications, the Governor declared, of what might be expected under a Democratic administration in the State. In defense of the increased taxation the speaker said that the situation last year made it necessary to meet honorably the obligations of the State, but that the emergency was not met by an increased general property tax. On the other hand, that tax was practically eliminated, while the revenue needed was derived from taxes imposed upon corporations, inheritances, the liquor traffic, and other sources.

The Governor then defended the stock transfer tax, declaring that instead of being driven across the North River, Stock Exchange trade has rarely, if ever, reached the volume that has been represented by the dealing of the last few months.

"No Democratic orator," said the speaker, "can face the people of this State with a proposition that the operations of the stock market be relieved from taxation and the amount now raised thereby be imposed upon the farm, the home, the small owner, and the small tenant.

"The Legislature, in response to a widespread demand, is earnestly laboring with the problem of mortgage taxation, and that question may still be regarded as an open one. Individually, I claim no credit and I accept no blame for the enactment of the present mortgage tax law. It was not recommended by me, and is no more a 'Higgins' law than any one of the other 760 laws placed on the statute books in the year 1905. I believed that the bill was sound in principle and I signed it."

The speaker went on to say that he believed that each dollar of wealth should contribute its share toward the expenses of government.

"We have given the city an 80-cent gas bill," said the Governor in conclusion. "We are putting the business of insurance upon a satisfactory basis. We are enacting laws for the welfare of labor."

ODELL WHACKS DUNN.

Both Chairman Odell and Gov. Higgins were in town yesterday. They didn't meet. Odell appeared confident and serene in his possession of the State Chairmanship. He only smiled when asked about the efforts of the Higgins forces to dislodge him. Gov. Higgins declined to talk on the situation, and more than indicated that he believed he had said too much the Saturday before when he declared that corporations and financial interests were selfishly trying to keep Odell in power.

Gov. Higgins and Charles E. Hughes, the insurance inquisitor, were together most of the afternoon at the Hotel Manhattan, going over the insurance legislative situation. Neither would discuss the matter afterward. As Mr. Hughes was hurrying away a reference was made to the boom which some Republicans have been launching for him for Governor.

"Oh, nonsense," was his only answer as he passed on.

The Governor refused to talk politics at all. While this was going on Chairman Odell was at the Fifth Avenue headquarters, going over the reapportionment plans with those of the faithful who had been summoned by him. At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the County Committee this week or next the Odell and Parsons forces will bring their fight to a finish on this issue.

"There is no occasion for any unpleasantness at that time," said Chairman Odell, smiling. He has twenty-two district leaders who are pledged to his plan out of a total of thirty-six. "I am not looking for any fight, and I want to see a harmonious organization in the city and State."

Chairman Odell's attention was called to the interview published up the State by Col. George W. Dunn, whom Odell ousted as Chairman to make room for himself two years ago. Dunn said that Odell would be "allowed" to remain as Chairman until after the adjournment of the Legislature.

"It is very kind of them to grant me this reprieve," said the Chairman. "I may now hope for a commutation of sentence, or perhaps I might get a retrial, and the retrial might result in an acquittal. Commutation always is agreeable to a condemned man, and I cannot express too strongly my gratitude to Col. Dunn for allowing me to remain at the head of the committee for even a few weeks longer."

Chairman Odell, it was learned, has no intention of calling any special meeting of the committee to show his strength, as such a move would destroy the harmony of action which the Chairman hopes to see established before the campaign opens. He is confident and does not see the necessity for "rubbing it in" on his opponents.

INSURANCE AGENT ARRESTED.

Indicted in Boston as Result of Lawson's Charges of Rebating.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 7.—Frederick F. Hockaway, agent for the New York Life and Mutual Life Insurance Companies, was immediately after being indicted by the Grand Jury to-day placed under arrest in the Exchange Building on a charge of illegal rebating, and taken to Police Headquarters.

This indictment was based on the charges made by Thomas W. Lawson, who produced evidence that certain persons had received policies in both companies for lower sums than the law allows, in return for the use of their proxies. Mr. Lawson desired the indictment of the high officials of the insurance companies, but finding that this could not be done, desired to withdraw his charges. This District Attorney Moran would not allow him to do, and the indictment followed.

Mr. Lawson, who has been actively at work for months in the endeavor to obtain proxies from policy holders, to be used in the coming annual elections of these companies, declared that the companies were offering insurance without the payment of premiums, or at least with heavy rebates, on the condition that those receiving these illegally issued policies should give their proxies to the companies themselves.

Subsequent to the publication of the charges Mr. Lawson laid the documentary and verbal evidence upon which they were based before District Attorney John B. Moran, and also consulted Attorney General Malone.

Upon examination of the evidence, however, by the legal authorities the conclusion was arrived at that, as the business of soliciting and the delivery of policies was done by agents located in Boston, and it could not be traced to the New York headquarters, criminal actions would not lie against the corporations or their officers, although the agents alleged to have done the work might come within the pale of the Massachusetts statutes forbidding the granting of rebates.

SUICIDE AFTER A SCOLDING.

Bride, Lectured by Husband, Jumped Out Window—Drugged, He Says.

Mrs. Lena S. Ives, who had been married for a year to John Ives, a foreman with the Fuller Construction Company, living at 918 East 156th Street, went out to do some shopping yesterday morning. When she returned home three hours later she was accompanied by two strange men, and, according to her husband, was under the influence of drugs or liquor.

Ives says the two men helped her up the steps of her apartments and then left her. Mrs. McJessey, a neighbor, remained with her until the husband returned, when, upon perceiving her condition, he upbraided her. Then he went into another room.

A few moments later some one knocked at his door and told him his wife had jumped from the fifth-story window of the apartment to the ground below, and had been killed. Several people who were passing also saw the woman fall. He ran down the steps and found his wife lifeless upon the pavement. A physician from the Lebanon Hospital said that she had crushed her skull and had been killed instantly by the fall.

Coroner McDonald made an investigation and was told that Mrs. Ives was not addicted to drink. He said that possibly the husband's theory that Mrs. Ives had been drugged was correct. The Coroner is trying to find the two men who took Mrs. Ives home.

Ives and his wife came to New York a short time ago from Boston. He told the police soon after his wife was killed that she was homesick and despondent. The husband said last night that he believed his wife had fallen out of the window accidentally while staggering about the room.

SULZER BOOM FOR GOVERNOR.

Communication Launching It Is Unsigned, but Enthusiastic.

The Sulzer boom came to the newspapers last night in the form of an unsigned and unlabeled press contribution. The statement began with reference to ex-Senator Hill's visit to Washington and the talks he is said to have had with Democratic leaders there, all of whom are declared to have indulged in "eulogistic talk regarding Congressman William Sulzer." The energetic press agent continues:

> The ex-Senator found that since his last visit to Washington Sulzer has become a great power at the National Capitol.
> The Democrats who talked to Senator Hill are already taking as much interest in the forthcoming political contest in New York as if it were a National fight, and the Senator found that in the opinion of these National observers the fight in 1908 will probably be but a repetition of what will occur here next Fall. A line-up between the Bryanite Democrats, backed up by the conservative element, as against the radical Hearst supporters, is bound to come. And why not now?
> The conservatives believe that the best way to unhorse Hearst is to nominate against him a man representing what Mr. Bryan stands for, and whose record shows that he is as good a vote getter among the labor classes as is Hearst himself. These Congressmen represented to Senator Hill that Congressman Sulzer was just that man. If a man of the type of Sulzer was not nominated, but a conservative, the Democratic candidate for Governor might be third in the race, but with Sulzer as a candidate of the Democracy, Hearst would certainly be third. It was generally believed in Washington that with Sulzer as the Democratic standard bearer Bryan would take the stump for him. Of course, one reason that the Congressmen are so anxious to have Sulzer nominated for Governor is that they believe that his nomination for Governor would result in a large Democratic Congressional delegation from New York, the result of which is that the next House might contain a Democratic majority.

Sulzer was a candidate for Governor in 1896, and at the Buffalo convention that year had a following that at least made enough noise to nominate him. Sulzer himself was a delegate from New York County, but, under the unit rule, the entire delegation was voted by John C. Sheehan, then the Tammany leader, for John Boyd Thacher, who later declined the nomination.

CLAVIN YOUNG'S BODY FOUND.

Was in Woods Near His Home with Bullet Wound in the Head.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, Tenn., April 7.—The body of Clavin Young, a business man of Grayson County, was found in the woods near his home to-day.

When Young disappeared several weeks ago blood upon the post of the bed in which he had been sleeping told of probable murder. A resident of the county was arrested and nearly was lynched before he was able to prove an alibi. A bullet hole was found in Young's head, and it is believed that he was murdered and carried from his bed into the woods.

CONCESSIONS EXPECTED BY ANTHRACITE MINERS

Their Officers in This City Look for Arbitration in Some Form.

OPERATORS HOLD A MEETING

Delegate of Independents Reports Result of Wilkesbarre Conference—$1,500,000 Lost in Wages So Far.

There appeared to be a feeling amounting almost to a belief among the officers of the anthracite mine workers at the Ashland House last night that the operators will agree to some form of arbitration, even should Mitchell's proposal not be accepted as it stands, an outcome that not even the most optimistic expect.

The operators' committee of seven, which is to confer with Mitchell's committee of seven to-morrow, met yesterday afternoon in the office of President E. B. Thomas of the Lehigh Valley Railroad to agree on an answer to the arbitration proposal of Mitchell. Besides the committee of seven there were present a number of mine Superintendents and Robert W. De Forrest, First Vice President and counsel of the Jersey Central Railroad.

On behalf of the independent operators J. L. Cake, who represented them on the committee of seven, reported the action on Mitchell's proposal taken at the meeting of the independent operators in Wilkesbarre on Friday. What result, if any, was reached could not be learned, but the operators' committee will meet again to-morrow at noon before they confer with Mitchell's committee, indicating that they did not decide on their answer to the miners yesterday.

There was a rumor, which no one would either deny or affirm, that some of the committee favored a counter proposition to the effect that the question be left to the Arbitration Committee appointed by President Roosevelt in 1902, and that the President be asked to fill the places of such members as are unwilling to serve. It was pointed out, however, that the recent pamphlet of President Willcox of the Delaware & Hudson Company said that no facts had been brought forward which were not covered by the award of the Anthracite Strike Commission.

President Mitchell was asked if he would agree to arbitrating the question of whether or not there were any new facts in the dispute to be arbitrated not covered by the award of the Anthracite Strike Commission. He answered that he would be glad to discuss with the operators any phase of arbitration.

"Our only desire," he said, "is to come to some amicable agreement that will prevent a prolonged strike."

Asked if he cared to explain his alleged inconsistency in offering arbitration to the anthracite operators and declining a proposal similar in terms from the soft coal operators, he replied:

"I have not said that I am opposed to arbitration of the soft coal question. The matter will have to be decided by the National Executive Committee of the union on April 17, and I cannot anticipate what action I will take then."

A statement was issued yesterday on behalf of the Operators' Committee of Seven, designed to show that the reports of the dangers attending anthracite mining have been largely exaggerated. It contrasts the mining industry with the work of the employes on railroads and says:

"In 1895, for example, among the 143,610 employes in the anthracite mines, 422, or 2.9 per thousand, met death by accident, while 1,120, or 7.7 per thousand, sustained non-fatal injuries. In the same year among the 785,034 railway employes in this country, 1,811, or 2.3 per thousand, met fatal and 25,696, or 32.7 per thousand, met non-fatal accidents. However, it has been pointed out that only about one-quarter of the railway employes are in any special danger. These in that year were the 157,731 trainmen and 43,158 switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen, and this class suffered nearly three-fourths of the accidents, with the death rate of 6.8 per thousand employes, or nearly twice the rate for fatalities among the inside anthracite workers, which was figured at 3.8 per thousand."

It is estimated that the anthracite miners have already lost $1,500,000 in wages through their one week of idleness.

WILKESBARRE, April 7.—There was persistent talk among coal-mining officials here to-day of a probable offer of arbitration from the operators' side in reply to the proposition of the mine workers. It embodies an offer to arbitrate the question of wages and an eight-hour day providing the mine workers agree to make the agreement thus reached last five years, in order to assure a protracted period of peace.

None of the independent operators who held a meeting here yesterday to agree upon a reply to the mine workers would admit that this was the decision reached by them, but others, who are in close touch with them, declared that such an outcome was not improbable.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—It is reported that if President Mitchell's arbitration plan is accepted by the operators the miners' leader will endeavor to have the anthracite freight earnings of the coal-carrying roads made a part of the miners' case before the Board of Conciliation or the umpire who may finally pass upon the matters in dispute. The claim, it is said, will be made that the freight charges are a considerable factor in establishing the selling price of hard coal, and that without a knowledge of the freight earnings the miners cannot expect to combat the statement of the coal companies that the limit of mining cost has been reached.

Reports from all sections of the hard coal field show little change in the situation. In some instances preparations for a resumption of work are said to be in progress. In other cases the mules have been taken out of the mines, which is regarded as an indication that a rejection of President Mitchell's arbitration proposition is anticipated.

WESTERN OPERATORS FIRM.

Refuse to Grant Miners' Demands and Criticise Robbins.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 7.—The Ohio coal operators held a largely attended meeting here to-day, at which it was unanimously decided to stand by their previously expressed determination not to grant the demand of the miners for the adoption of the scale of 1903. A resolution was adopted strongly criticising the action of President Robbins of the Pittsburg Coal Company for making terms with the miners.

"In direct violation of the inter-State agreement," it says, "the interests of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio operators, representing about 50 per cent. of the production of Western Pennsylvania, were betrayed by a private understanding between the National President of the miners' organization and the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Pittsburg Coal Company. As a result of this understanding the miners of the four States, through their representatives, have entered into an agreement with a portion of the operators of Western Pennsylvania and permitted members of their organization to resume work in said State to the disadvantage of the other States in the competitive field, thereby wrecking the inter-State movement and producing chaos in the mining industry in the four States."

During the meeting word was received that the Illinois Colliery Company, a Pittsburg Coal Company corporation, had refused to sign the scale, despite the agreement entered into between Robbins and Mitchell.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 7.—All is peace again in the Pittsburg district. Every company had signed the scale this evening except the Pittsburg and Westmoreland Coal Company. This concern has only four mines in the section known as the Pittsburg district, all its other properties being situated in the Irwin field.

The Pittsburg Coal Company succeeded in starting all but one of its mines to-day. Monday every mine in the district will go on. The men are very much dissatisfied, however, and think the settlement means disaster for the union. The independent operators say in a statement issued, that although they sign the scale now, it is with a foreboding that it will bring trouble to them in the near future, and they do not look for a good year as a result.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, April 7.—The coal strike so far as Texas miners are concerned has been settled and practically all of the 5,000 strikers will return to work next Monday morning.

Miners Hold Up a Coal Train.

Special to The New York Times.

LORAIN, Ohio, April 7.—The first interference on the part of striking miners with the coal carrying roads occurred last night at Barton, a small water station on the Baltimore & Ohio, forty miles north of Benwood. A party of 200 miners surrounded a train of mixed freight bound for Cleveland and compelled the crew to detach eight gondolas loaded with coal from the West Virginia fields.

WAGON KILLS TRAINED NURSE.

Miss Carew Died in a Dry Goods Shop Amid Heaps of Flowers.

Returning from caring for a patient, Miss Elizabeth M. Carew, a trained nurse who lived at a registry for nurses at 137 West Twenty-first Street, while trying to cross Sixth Avenue at Twenty-third Street last night, was run over by a delivery wagon belonging to a department store. A passing car had shut from her view the wagon that knocked her down. The wheels passed over her neck.

She was taken into a dry goods store at the corner. It was Spring opening day there yesterday, and the store was filled with flowers. The clerks had begun to take some of them down. The most convenient place to lay Miss Carew was on a table about which flowers were piled high. She died there before Dr. Cottle arrived from Bellevue Hospital. The body was removed to the Tenderloin Station and later to the Morgue.

The body of Miss Carew was identified by Miss Abbie Capwell, another trained nurse who lives at the Twenty-first Street address. She said that Miss Carew was a graduate of the Elizabeth Training School for Nurses, at Elizabeth, N. J. She came to New York from Halifax, N. S., some six or seven years ago, Miss Capwell said.

Policeman McDonough locked up in the Tenderloin Station Joseph Mulcahey, 1,331 Second Avenue, the driver of the wagon, on the charge of homicide. Maurice Reisman, 166 East 104th Street, a helper on the wagon, was also locked up.

FIELDS STILL INDOORS.

Physician Would Keep Mutual Officials Away If He Could.

Andrew C. Fields is still too ill to make a full statement with regard to the Albany "House of Mirth" and the various expenses of the Mutual Life Supply Department. At his house at Dobbs Ferry it was learned yesterday that, though he leaves his room for a few hours every day, he has not yet been out of doors.

Dr. C. H. Judson, his physician, stated that he thought it would be at least a fortnight before he would be able to attend to business.

"Has he had any communication with the officials of the Mutual?" Dr. Judson was asked.

"As far as I know he has not, and if I heard of it I would keep the officials away at the present, just as I am keeping the newspaper men away. I would do this entirely on the score of his health, and as Mr. Fields is a very good patient, I think he would abide by my advice."

Percy A. Rockefeller, it is expected, will take Mr. Fields's house at Dobbs Ferry for the Summer, as he has done for some years past, and Fields will go to his New Jersey cottage.

CAB AND AUTO CRASH.

Hansom Overturned and Fare Thrown Out in Fifth Avenue Collision.

A hansom cab and an automobile were in collision early last night at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-second Street, and the hansom was overturned. Henry Cooper, 534 West Fiftieth Street, the cab driver, and Dr. Harty, a guest of the Imperial Hotel, who was in the hansom, were both thrown out. Henry Cooper got some bruises on the knee, and also got angry and wanted John Kent, the chauffeur, arrested and taken to the Tenderloin Station by Detectives Raynes and McAndrews.

Kent said that he was driving an automobile belonging to the H. B. Claflin Company; that he had in his machine one of Mrs. John Claflin's children and a maid, and that he would have to take them to 15 Washington Square North before he could go to the police station. A detective went down with him and brought him back. But by the time Kent had returned Cooper had relented, and he refused to make a charge of reckless driving. Kent was released.

MRS. ROOSEVELT RETURNS.

SAVANNAH, Ga., April 7.—Mrs. Roosevelt and party left the Mayflower at Tybee this morning, changing to the United States tender Wistaria. As the steamer passed up the river to the city whistles blew and people waved at the party, who returned the salutes standing on the deck of the boat. The flags of all the Consulates, of the many business houses, and all the craft on the river were flying.

When the boat landed it was met by Gen. Thomas F. Barr, United States Army, a personal friend of the President's family, and Major Charles McClure, in attendance here on the Greene and Gaynor trial, in full uniform, and George F. White, United States Marshal.

The party was driven about the city, the drive terminating at the Union Station, where a private car was boarded. The party left at 2:20 o'clock this afternoon for Washington.

FIREMAN'S WIDOW THERE.

Had to Turn Away When She Saw Walsh's Old Companions at Work.

A small fire started yesterday afternoon in the six-story factory building at 324 and 326 East Twenty-third Street. Across the street is the home of Mrs. John Walsh, widow of Foreman "Jack" Walsh, who was killed in the Downing Street fire ten days ago. She watched her late husband's engine company at work.

Mrs. Walsh and her five little children were looking from the window of their home when Engine Company No. 14 drew up at the fire. In some way it became known among the crowd which had gathered that "Jack" Walsh's widow and children were looking on. When Mrs. Walsh became aware that she had been seen she suddenly withdrew from the window with the children, sobbing at the revival of the memory of Walsh's death.

The fire was soon extinguished. The stock of the Gramercy Press Company on the third floor suffered but slightly.

CHAFFEE FOR HAINES'S PLACE

Presidency of Bergh Society Said to Have Been Offered Him.

According to a report which, although not official, came from a reliable source, Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, who retired as Chief of Staff of the United States Army a little more than two months ago, has been offered the position of President of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals at a salary of $6,000 a year. Gen. Chaffee, it was said, has taken the offer under consideration and will probably return his answer to those through whom the offer was made upon his arrival in this city from the South either to-morrow or the day after.

Gen. Chaffee, if he accepts, will succeed John P. Haines, whose forced resignation several weeks ago ended one of the stormiest incidents in the history of the society, and one which for a time threatened to cause a serious rupture within the organization. Gen. Chaffee's name has also been mentioned recently in connection with the Police Commissionership of this city. The post was offered him by Mayor McClellan just before the beginning of the Mayor's second term. According to a recent report the offer was repeated within the last few days.

Post Offered to Dr. F. R. Lane.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 7.—Dr. Francis R. Lane, Principal of the Polytechnic Preparatory School of Brooklyn, was to-day elected Director of the Jacob Tome Institute at Port Deposit, Md., to succeed Dr. Abram Winegartner Harris, who on July 1 will become President of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill. Four years ago Dr. Lane went to Brooklyn from Washington, D. C., where for twelve years he was Director of the High School. He has not yet accepted the Directorship of the Tome Institute, but it is believed he will do so.

CITY FERRY'S MISHAPS.

Passengers Almost Walk Overboard—Woman Thrown Down a Stairway.

A gateman on the ferryboat Bronx of the Municipal Ferry yesterday afternoon kept a number of passengers bound from Manhattan to St. George from walking off the boat into the bay. As the boat entered the slip the passengers left their seats on the upper deck and descended to the lower deck. They stood there, crowded one against the other at the gate, waiting for the boat to be made fast.

The gateman was about to raise the gate, when the boat shot backward out of the slip into the bay. The gates were partly raised, and the deckhands, seeing the danger, quickly pushed those in front back and dropped the gates again. They were just in time to keep the crowd from rushing forward and plunging into the bay. The incident was attributed to a misunderstanding of signals by the engineer.

Mary Jordan, 20 years old, of Van Name Avenue, Mariner's Harbor, was seriously injured last night on board the ferryboat Brooklyn of the same line. When the boat reached this side she arose from her seat on the upper deck and started to descend the stairway.

Just as she arrived at the top landing the boat struck the dock with such force as to throw her from her feet, and she plunged headlong down the stairs. She was picked up in a semi-conscious condition. She refused to go to a hospital in Manhattan, and was taken back to Staten Island, where she was taken to the Smith Infirmary and examined by Dr. Holmes. She was injured about the head and body, but will recover.

CONSUL'S BROTHER MISSING.

Daniel G. Slattery, Police Commissioner Bingham's secretary, called up Roundsman O'Grady at Headquarters last night and asked if there was any record of a man named Emilio Figueredo of 65 West 100th Street, who has been missing from his home since last Friday. According to the Directory, he is a clerk.

There was no record at the Police Department answering the description of Figueredo. The missing man is a brother of Carlos D. Figueredo, Consul General in this city from Venezuela, who has an office at 88 Wall Street, and lives at 101 West Eightieth Street. It is thought that the Consul General notified Commissioner Bingham of his brother's disappearance, and that he ordered his secretary to make an investigation. So far, no clue to his whereabouts has been discovered.

OVERSEA WIRELESS IS A FACT, SAYS DE FOREST

Cables That He's Received Manhattan Beach Messages.

SENDS WORD FROM IRELAND

But Not by Wireless, Because, Says President White, the Irish Station Has No Sending Apparatus.

Announcing that it settled all controversy as to whether actual communication has been established by the De Forest Wireless Telegraph system between the despatching station on Manhattan Beach and the receiving station at Glengarriff, Allihies, County of Cork, Ireland, President Abraham White of the De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company said last night that he had received the following cablegram from Lee De Forest, the inventor:

Allihies, Cork County, April 6.
Bondwhite, N. Y.:
Messages being read clearly. Transatlantic wireless now assured.

In making public the cablegram, Mr. White said that it had not been sent by wireless because the Irish station was only a receiving station. He said that De Forest's dispatch settled the whole subject, and that after repeated experiment the De Forest Company was able to send any sort of message from New York to Ireland.

"One night about two weeks ago," said Mr. White, "I sent a message of 851 words to De Forest. It was received without a hitch. That work assured us absolute success. Now, on behalf of the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, I wish to announce the successful transmission of aerographic communication across the Atlantic Ocean direct, without a single relay, from the Manhattan Beach station, employing 40 kilowatts, (20,000 volts of electricity,) at the rate of 20 words per minute, to a point on the other side of the Atlantic in Glengarriff Harbor, County of Cork, Ireland, where Dr. Lee De Forest, the young American inventor of wireless telegraphy, received accurately and clearly the messages recently aerographed to him.

"Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, has co-operated with us in this great work, having sent a representative to England with Dr. Lee De Forest for the purpose of conducting experiments with his tetrahedral kites in connection with the De Forest wireless telegraphy system, the kites being elevated and used instead of the ordinary masts.

"The kites were originally intended for practically exclusive use in connection with aerial navigation, but have been found to be exceedingly useful and valuable for wireless work, as was recently demonstrated also at Dr. Bell's laboratory in Virginia, when messages were received from distant points. Dr. Bell is now in England, and is co-operating with us in this work.

"I now predict the successful transmission of transpacific wireless. On land we have sent messages as far West as Leavenworth, Kan. Land work is therefore assured, too, as far as long distances are concerned. Now we intend to have press messages sent from Manhattan Beach to Ireland, and we would like to have the newspapers select an operator who shall superintend the work. Its legitimacy can be secured by reason of the fact that our messages travel as fast as the rays of light, or about 180,000 miles a second.

"Measuring that rate, therefore, the newspapers can judge, by the time at which the message is received in Ireland, its true character. I have been sending De Forest news about the coal strike and other matters printed in the New York evening newspapers each day. I have been very successful in this.

"The station in Ireland is equipped with Dr. Bell's tetrahedral kites, with frames of aluminium. He lent them to us for our purpose, and they have worked magnificently.

"On March 27 I received this dispatch from Dr. Bell at Washington:

Thanks for aerogram received to-day at my kite station in Virginia. Congratulations upon the success of the experiment. I sail to-morrow morning by White Star steamer Cedric, and would be obliged if you would send me the address of Mr. De Forest.

"The message was sent by Dr. Bell in response to a 200-word message congratulating him on his telephone achievements, and calling attention to the fact that the telephone and the tetrahedral kites had been used in connection with our wireless system.

"The message from De Forest settles the dispute as to what we have been doing and what we have accomplished. We have now made wireless across the ocean an established fact."

The Hotel Belmont, which is to open soon at Forty-second Street and Park Avenue, is to be the first hotel in the world to be equipped with a wireless telegraphic apparatus for the use of its guests.

The great height of the Belmont, more than 300 feet above the street level, and its comparative isolation as regards high buildings of steel construction, make the location good for wireless operations. The staff to be erected on the top of the building by the De Forest Company is to be 150 feet in height.

Another of the many disputed questions regarding patented wireless telegraph devices was settled yesterday by an opinion handed down by Judge Wheeler, in the United States Circuit Court, in the case of the National Electric Signaling Company against the De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, wherein the court reaffirms its previous decision, granting an injunction against the defendant.

The device complained of, according to Philip Farnsworth, counsel for the De Forest Company, is only a small portion of his company's receiving apparatus, and the injunction, he says, does n't affect the De Forest wireless system as a whole, as it will simply return to the use of one of its earlier receiving machines.

Finger Prints to Identify Deserters.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Finger prints are hereafter to be used by the War Department in identifying deserters. An order has been issued providing for the taking of prints of the fingers of all men entering the service, in addition to photographs and various measurements. This action was taken on the recommendation of a board which made a thorough investigation of finger prints as a means of identification and decided they are even more useful than photographs and measurements.

MARONI'S TWO CONTRACTS.

They Will Be Among the Subjects of Street-Cleaning Inquiry.

Preliminary examinations of affairs of the Department of Street Cleaning under Commissioner Woodbury, made by the attorneys and the accountants of the Aldermanic committee which is to begin its public sessions on April 16, have revealed much interesting material upon which the inquisitors may base their investigation.

One of the things unearthed is in connection with the "trimming" contract held by Joseph Maroni, who pays the department $1,200 weekly for his privilege. This privilege of trimming the ashes and refuse generally is considered a gold mine, and Maroni is supposed to have made a fortune out of it. It is now alleged that he has a drawback through another contract for furnishing labor for the incinerator and lighting plant under the Williamsburg Bridge. The Italian laborers he furnished to the department under this contract, it is declared, are paid from $5 to $10 a week by Maroni, the average being $7. From the city Maroni gets 25 cents an hour for the work of the men, and they work twelve hours a day generally. This means $18 a week for the employer. His average receipts from this source, it is said, have been $541 weekly since the first of the year.

The committee also will inquire into the purchases of coal, harness, and forage for the department without public letting. The Commissioner himself has reported that during his four years in office he has paid out $740,645 for these and other materials without public letting. Some of the bills ran as high as $990, and came just within the $1,000 limit, above which public letting is required. One company furnished all the leather used, another company had a monopoly for furnishing paint, and another company had a monopoly of the hardware sales to the department.

William M. Ivins, counsel for the committee, and J. H. Cohen are hard at work preparing for the investigation, and two firms of accountants are busy on the department books, documents, and contracts.

CAN'T PREVENT EXPLOSIONS.

Gasoline Vapor Gathers Rapidly in Sewers, Says Engineer Loomis.

Horace Loomis, Chief Engineer of the Bureau of Sewers, said yesterday that after a hasty examination of the causes leading to the sewer explosion on the upper west side Friday he still believes that the accumulation of gases generated by waste gasoline from neighboring garages was responsible.

"The peculiar feature of the case," said Mr. Loomis, "is that sometime ago a man put in a claim for $30 damages for broken windows against the Sewer Department and I had three men go through the sewers three days ago to make an investigation. One of them carried a lighted candle without mishap.

"But on investigation I find that the gases accumulate in an instant and the explosions, therefore, cannot be guarded against. At some of the garages in the district I found waste pipes to the sewers where the naphtha and gasoline were discharged. One man told me that if he emptied half a barrel of gasoline into a waste pipe it would evaporate into gas before it had run half a block. Assuming that then the gas mingles with the air and when it reaches a manhole an explosion will follow.

"I am going to pursue this investigation further, and if the garages are to blame we shall certainly do something to remedy the situation. My men found that most of the damage done on Friday was to window panes."

Chief Engineer Bradley of the Consolidated Gas Company said last night that investigation had proved that the sewer explosions were not caused by gas leaks.

AID FOR STARVING JAPANESE.

N. Y. State Red Cross Arranges to Forward Contributions of Food.

The New York State branch of the Red Cross Society has completed plans for shipping food to the famine sufferers in the north of Japan. Those persons who wish to help in the work may deliver goods at any freight station of the Union Pacific or Southern Pacific Railroad. The consignments should be addressed to "Count Matsukata, President of the Japanese Red Cross, Yokohama, Japan." E. H. Harriman has offered to transport all such packages to the Pacific Coast, and thence by steamship to Japan.

The kind of food sent should be plainly indicated by label, which should also give directions for its preparation. These directions will be translated into Japanese and placed on another label. Many kinds of food used in this country would be of no value to the Japanese, so, on the advice of Consul-General Uchida, the following articles are recommended: Beans, peas, wheat flour, sweet potatoes, dried fish, canned soups, canned meats, and condensed milk.

GROWTH OF NURSES' WORK.

There Are Now More Than 200 Visiting Organizations.

The achievements of visiting nurses throughout the United States and the wonderful growth of the system in the last few years are subjects of an article in yesterday's issue of "Charities and The Commons." In 1901 there were only fifty-three visiting nursing organizations in the country; now there are more than 200. The hundreds of nurses therein—school nurses, settlement nurses, contagious disease nurses, tuberculosis nurses—go to the homes of the poor, to those who are sick and unable to help themselves. The twenty-six nurses in the Visiting Nurses's Association in Chicago, for instance, cared for 7,000 patients last year.

The Nurses' Settlement in New York was the first institution of the kind, but others like it have been established in many cities. To poor patients these organizations furnish surgical bandages and dressings. Elastic stockings, braces, eyeglasses, wheel chairs, comforters, and blankets are also lent.

TRUE ALSO OF MR. HARRIMAN

Mutual's President, in Letter to Former London Manager, Declares He is Entirely Unpledged.

President Peabody of the Mutual Life Insurance Company gave out a letter yesterday which he wrote to D. C. Haldeman, the Mutual's ex-manager in London, on Jan. 16, about the controversy that was even then in progress between the British policy holders and the company. This is the letter, in part:

"I appreciate fully the difficulties under which the interests of the company are now laboring, and which to a great extent are common to all the agencies, foreign and domestic, but which press more heavily on you than some of the others. I am convinced that the company has entered upon a course which, persisted in constantly, will ultimately triumph over the unfortunate circumstances which have shaken public confidence and will restore to us the good-will of our policy holders and others who very naturally have criticised severely the methods employed by the company.

"Those portions of your letter relating to the company's business are referred to Vice President McClintock, who has been placed by the Committee on Agencies in general charge of all the agencies, and have been and will be the subject of serious consideration by him and the committee.

"To those parts which relate to the policy to be pursued by the company's chief executive, and which therefore relate more personally to myself, I beg leave to say that the statements of the newspapers that my appointment as President has any connection with any 'Rockefeller-Morgan combination' are entirely without foundation. I have not now and never have had any connection of any kind with these gentlemen. Indeed, I have not their acquaintance, and have no reason to suppose and have never heard it suggested, except by the newspapers, that they had any connection with or attempted to exert any influence directly or indirectly on the subject of my election.

"In saying this I intend to be understood as saying all that is to be implied by these words. I want to be understood as saying that all suggestions that I am the instrument of, or was proposed by, or am in any way under the influence of the gentlemen identified with the Standard Oil Comapny, have no basis whatever, except in the efforts of sensational journalism.

"Substantially the same may be said of Mr. Harriman. Mr. Harriman has not now and never has had any connection with this company. I have never heard it suggested that he wished to have, or that he or any one else expects him to have any influence, direct or indirect, over its affairs. I do not believe that he has ever thought of having any such influence, or has any desire in that connection.

"Please do not understand me as in any way, by implication or otherwise, intending or desiring to cast any reflections upon any of these gentlemen. I am simply stating facts in answer to the suggestions of your letter, which, in my opinion, are unjust to them, as they are to me.

"To sum up in a few words, let me add that I came to the service of the company without pledges, bonds, or obligations of any kind which could make me subject to the influence of any one as controlling my official action. The purpose of the Trustees in electing me and my purpose in accepting the election are to reorganize the business of the company upon the most efficient methods.

"The most rigid economy in the expenditure of the company's funds, the most prudent and conservative investment of the company's resources, the utmost vigilance and activity in the promotion of the company's business, and the guarding of its interests are the only things that have been asked of me by those who proposed and supported my election. For any action of mine as President I alone am responsible. No one will attempt to control me, nor would I be influenced by any one against what I conceive to be the best interests of the company and its policy holders."

EQUITABLE AGENT FINED.

French Lawyer Wins Action Against Director General Peixotto.

PARIS, April 7.—The Correctional Tribunal of the Seine rendered a decision today in the suit for alleged slander and defamation of character brought by M. Duboin, a lawyer, against Percy Peixotto, Director General in Paris of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, and against the society.

The tribunal dismissed the complaint of defamation of character, but sustained the charge of slander. Mr. Peixotto was fined 3,000f. and 1f. civil damages.

The Equitable Society was declared to be responsible for the actions of its local Director General.

M. Duboin formed at the beginning of this year an association for the protection of Frenchmen insured in the Equitable. Mr. Peixotto complained to the Minister of Justice that M. Duboin was conducting a campaign of calumny and blackmail. The suit just decided was the result.

BRING FORTUNE IN JEWELS.

When the United States customs officials began to examine the baggage of the Marquis and Marquise de Breteuil, who arrived yesterday on the Lorraine, one of the other passengers warned the Inspector to whom the duty fell to put on smoked glasses before looking into the de Breteuil jewel box.

The advice was prompted by the solicitude with which the Marquis and Marquise had been mounting guard over this part of their belongings on board the Lorraine, which had been the talk of all the other passengers on the ship. The Breteuil family jewels were contained in a leather-covered box one foot and a half square. They are said to be worth several hundred thousand dollars.

During the entire voyage the couple kept the jewel box close to them. When the Marquis was taking a walk on the deck, according to fellow-passengers, he carried the case in his hand. Even when they were at dinner the jewel box remained always within their sight. Yesterday, when the Marquis made his customs declaration, he took from his pocket a little jewel-studded revolver, which he placed with the other valuables in the leather-covered box.

They had thirty pieces of luggage besides. These they trusted to a manservant, but they took the jewel casket with them when they drove away from the pier. The Marquise de Breteuil is a daughter of the late Commodore Garner of the New York Yacht Club, who was drowned when his yacht, the Mohawk, capsized some twenty-five years ago.

THE AMERIKA CROWDED.

The steamer Amerika of the Holland-America Line sailed from Hoboken yesterday afternoon with every cabin taken and over 1,000 emigrants on board. Most of these were Germans returning to their native land. A crowd variously estimated to number 6,000 persons, a large number of whom were women, witnessed the sailing of the liner.

About an hour before the steamer sailed a woman complained to the detective on the dock that she had been robbed of a diamond brooch while making her way through the crowd.

It was said that three professional gamblers had taken passage on the steamer, and the Marshals tried to find them. They did not succeed in catching them, however, before the ship sailed.

PERKINS MEMORIAL PLANNED.

Anniversary of Discovery of Coal-Tar Dyes to be Celebrated.

There was a meeting last night at the Chemists' Club, 108 West Fifty-fifth Street, to prepare for a proper memorial to the English chemist, William Henry Perkins, discoverer of the process of making colors from coal tar. At this meeting it was decided to appoint a committee of fifteen to confer with the English committee that is planning for the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery by Perkins of the dyestuff "mauve."

At the meeting last night Dr. Charles F. Chandler presided. Dr. H. Schweitzer pointed out that the discovery of "mauve" meant the foundation of the coal-tar industry and gave stimulus to the study of organic chemistry. Thus the modern progress in the manufacture of synthetic medicines, photographic developers, artificial perfumes, sweeteners, and of explosives, was due to the original work of Perkins.

FOUND DYING NEAR RAILROAD.

Police Suspected a Murder, but Surgeons Say It Was an Accident.

On the theory that he might have been murdered, the police of Jersey City and Hoboken began an investigation into the death of a man who was found unconscious near the Erie tracks below the Lackawanna viaduct at Ravine Road, Hoboken, on Friday night, and who died soon afterward.

A derby hat, bearing the name of M. Israel of 399 Centre Avenue, Jersey City, lay beside him. A short distance away lay a whisky bottle, which was stained with blood. The man was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, where he died two hours later of a fractured skull.

The disappearance of the man's shoes and coat is not yet explained, but the surgeons think the man was drunk and was struck by a train.

546 SUDDEN DEATHS IN MARCH

There were forty-eight homicides and thirty-five suicides in Manhattan in March. For the first time in the history of the Coroners' office a detailed tabulation of sudden deaths was issued yesterday by Chief Clerk Bausen. The list separates deaths according to causes.

In March 546 cases of sudden death were reported to the Coroners. Of these 361 died of natural causes. The 185 other deaths are classified as follows:

Burns and scalds, 17; suffocated by smoke at fires, 5; accidentally poisoned, 2; elevator accidents, 1; accidental asphyxiation, 8; asphyxiation from coal gas, 3; accidentally shot, 3; explosions, 2; crushed by rock, 2; fell from chairs or to sidewalk, 44.

Homicides, according to the Coroners' table, includes railroad and street car accidents, 15; shooting, 7; cutting, 2; illegal operations, 5; beating, choking, &c., 4; knockout drops, 1; passenger elevators, 5; run over by wagons, 6; run over by automobile, 1.

In January the homicides numbered 30 and the suicides 49. Eighteen of the January suicides were by illuminating gas. In February there were 33 homicides and 33 suicides. The total number of sudden deaths reported to the Coroners in the first three months of the year was 1,400. On this number 535 died violently and 865 from natural causes.

HE WILL NOT ASK FOR BONUS

Willing to Pay for the Right of Way—Many Branch Lines Are Projected.

Special to The New York Times.

WINNIPEG, April 7.—James J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railroad, has written to the Winnipeg Board of Trade confirming reports that he is about to build a new railroad through Canada from Montreal to the Pacific.

"We are now undertaking," he says, "to build up a new system—a transcontinental line through the Canadian Northwest—which I hope will serve to further develop your city and the country from which its prosperity is drawn. I am called East on business which will keep me until about the 1st of May, after which time I intend to visit Winnipeg."

Andrew Strang, President of the Winnipeg Board of Trade, to whom the letter was addressed, explains:

"The Great Northern will come into Winnipeg from the East and will continue on through Western Canada to the Pacific Coast. From Montreal west the line will parallel the Canadian Pacific.

"One very pleasing feature of the undertaking is that Mr. Hill asks no bonus. He seeks a right of way, and is willing to pay a fair price for it. Thus the coming of the Great Northern will be unique in the history of Canadian railroads. Every railroad heretofore has sought from the Government at Ottawa, and has obtained, valuable land grants. It is understood that Mr. Hill will ignore these grants and will buy the right of way throughout the entire line."

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, April 7.—It is announced that the Great Northern will begin construction of its Canadian line at once from Winnipeg to Vancouver, B. C., and that before long the eastern extension will be undertaken. The big railroad contractors of Minnesota are now figuring on the construction work.

One of them said to-day that within sixty days more than 4,000 miles of the road would be under contract.

"While the contract which we have undertaken calls for the building of the line to the Pacific Coast," he said, "there will be no less than twelve branch lines running south into the gold fields, the oil fields, and the coal deposits. Of these seven will run into Northern North Dakota, Northern Montana, Idaho, and Washington, and will connect with the main line of the Great Northern.

"The scheme involves the most intricate system of cross lines and interchange of traffic that has ever been devised in the Northwest. The great transcontinental line promises to be an important feeder for the main line of the Great Northern in the States, and yet will draw from the most settled agricultural sections of the Canadian Northwest.

"Unlike the Canadian Pacific, it will not be necessary for the Hill road to drag its trains across the entire continent loaded with freight, for it may reach the markets of the Middle States via Winnipeg and St. Paul or via Winnipeg or Duluth through the lake route to Buffalo or Chicago."

While Mr. Hill has said that his road would operate from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it is understood that Montreal will be the Eastern terminus, with probably a traffic connection with some line reaching Boston. The associates of Mr. Hill are sanguine that the road will be completed within two years.

MORE WAINWRIGHT PLUNDER.

The Police Have Now Recovered All But $100 Worth—He Goes West.

In the discovery yesterday of $1,900 worth of coins, pledged for $30, the work of the Detective Bureau in unearthing the plunder of Thomas J. Wainwright, who is accused of stealing about $150,000 worth of property from the home of Dr. Joseph Penault of Minneapolis, is ended.

Wainwright left the city at 1 o'clock yesterday in charge of detectives from Minneapolis. All but about $100 worth of the plunder has been recovered by the Detective Bureau.

On a confession from the prisoner Detective Murphy called at a shop in East Twenty-third Street and recovered twenty-seven rare coins belonging to Mr. Penault, which had been pledged by Wainwright for $27. At another shop in East Twenty-third Street he found the rest of the coins.

Of the plunder taken by Wainwright, $143,000 was found by the police of this city in Wainwright's safe deposit box at the Corn Exchange Bank; $7,000 in lace, jewelry, and trinkets was found in his trunks at Providence; $3,000, the value of a watch once owned by Cardinal Richelieu, was found in Wainwright's pocket at the time of his arrest, and $500 worth of miscellaneous articles have been recovered.

BAD EYESIGHT IN SCHOOLS.

Alarmingly Prevalent, According to Dr. Cronin—Pure Milk Needed.

Dr. John J. Cronin, who has recently subjected 55,000 school children in New York to a physical examination, told a meeting held under the auspices of the District Nursing Department of the Presbyterian Hospital School for Nursing at Florence Nightingale Hall, 37 East Seventy-first Street, Friday night, that one-third of those he had examined had defective eyesight, and that another third had bad teeth.

Dr. Cronin said he found that the physically defective were also mentally defective, and that when physical defects were removed the children at once became brighter and in most cases took higher rank in their classes.

There was a general discussion. Dr. William H. Park, Director of the Department of Health Laboratory, advised the pasteurization of milk for children during the Summer months. John Spargo of Prospect House, Yonkers, said that the physical well-being of all children must depend upon a healthful milk supply, and that the sale of patent foods, which were often "patent poisons," should be restricted. Dr. William P. Northrup, Professor of the Diseases of Children at the New York University and Bellevue Medical School, also spoke. Dr. Linsly R. Williams presided.

PLACE FOR DR. E. A. SPITZKA.

Jefferson Medical College Calls Him to Chair of General Anatomy.

Dr. Edward Anthony Spitzka, whose researches on the anatomy of the brain, by controverting some of the current theories on the subject, have recently attracted considerable attention in scientific circles in this country and in Europe, was elected yesterday to the Chair of General Anatomy at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia.

Dr. Spitzka, who is the son of the alienist, Dr. E. C. Spitzka, is not yet 30 years of age. Despite his youth Dr. Spitzka has published more than thirty articles dealing chiefly with the anatomy of the brain, comparative anatomy, the psychology of crime, &c. While an undergraduate in a medical school he was summoned by the State to perform the autopsy and examine the brain of Czolgosz, McKinley's assassin, in conjunction with Dr. Carlos F. MacDonald. Since then he has made a study of the brains of many noted criminals, with the result that he finds no support for the Lombrosian theory that there is a type of born criminal, easily distinguished by physical stigmata.

For the last two years Prof. Spitzka has been the Demonstrator of Anatomy at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in this city.

GORKY'S ADOPTED SON TELLS OF WRITER'S PLANS

On His Way Here to Get Aid for the Revolutionists.

TO SPEAK IN MANY CITIES

Pieshkoff Says His Foster Father Will Show Russian Life as It Really Is.

Nikolay Zavolzsky Pieshkoff, adopted son and protégé of Maxim Gorky, the famous Russian writer, who is due here in a few days, talked with a TIMES reporter yesterday. For more than a year, the young man, who fled from Russia to escape persecution by the agents of the Government, has been living quietly on the east side and earning his living in the mailing room of Wilshire's Magazine.

Young Pieshkoff, who is only 22 and looks younger, is small of stature, with strong Russian features, blazing black eyes, and long raven hair of silken fineness. He is sturdy and well built, and his face has the expression of deep seriousness and earnestness that comes to the Russian of revolutionary bent of mind when still in student years. He deprecated efforts to get him to tell the story of his struggles in Russia and on this side.

"My father," he said, "is a great man. He has dared and done and suffered for the cause of Russian freedom, and the story of his deeds might tend to inspire others, but there is no reason why anything should be written about me."

There came into his eyes a light and to his cheeks a color which told eloquently of the love and admiration the young man feels for the Russian writer and friend of freedom, who in early childhood took him under his protecting care and made him what he is by giving him the means of education and the privilege of his own companionship. Young Pieshkoff avers that this companionship has done more for him than all the other advantages that have come to him through the aid of his adopted father. He was quite willing to discuss the plans of Maxim Gorky in this country.

To Make Many Speeches.

"Father comes," he said, "to tell the people of this great free country the true story of Russian oppression and move their hearts to aid in the cause of those who struggle for freedom here. It is very likely that he will visit all the great cities and make speeches in the cause of Russian freedom, but there is no fixed programme as yet.

"The newspapers cannot possibly give the American people a true picture of Russian life. My father can. He will show the American capitalists, I believe, that if they give the Russian Government any aid and comfort they are doing great harm, not only to the Russian people, but to the whole world."

M. Gorky has written extensively to Gaylord Wilshire, owner and publisher of the Socialistic magazine that bears his name, of his plans in this country. During his stay in this city M. Gorky and his wife will be the guests of Mr. Wilshire.

"Gorky is coming to America," said Mr. Wilshire, "partly because he wishes to escape the persistent hounding by the secret police to which the Russian Government has subjected him and partly to tell the true story of Russia and raise funds to help make Russia free.

"His health is also poor, largely because of persistent persecution in his native land. For that reason a complete change of air and surroundings was necessary. It is likely that he will visit California and remain there long enough to recuperate.

"No programme has been arranged, but receptions and big meetings will be held while he is in this country."

M. Gorky recently wrote a letter to Mr. Wilshire in which he said:

Never a People So Tortured.

"You in New York live so far away and in such a quiet country that you can hardly realize what terrible and stupendous things are now happening in Russia. Oh, the rivers of blood that have been spilled! You in America would hardly believe the facts, even if they should be told you. In all history there has never been a Government which has tortured its people as has the Government of the present Czar. Perhaps the nearest approach in history was the slaughter done by the Kings of Assyria, but those Kings slaughtered in the belief that they were glorifying the gods.

"The electoral law establishing the Douma was a farce. The people refuse to go to the polls. Nobody will register. In cities of several hundred thousand population about one hundred register. Why? Because no freedom of speech or assemblage is allowed. In the majority of our cities the local Governors have made it against the law for more than three to walk together in the streets. If you disobey the policemen may shoot you, as they are now armed with rifles. In St. Petersburg more than seven are forbidden to gather together in one house. Is it possible to conceive of the Douma being of any good when the people have no freedom of speech, of press, or of meeting?"

In telling his own story young Nikolay paid a warm and earnest tribute to his foster father. He said that he had been left without father and mother, without kindred of any kind, and practically without friends. While he was making a precarious living, and sometimes on the verge of starvation, he despaired because he could not satisfy the craving for knowledge that had been awakened within him by the study of a few books that came into his way. In this plight he first made acquaintance with the works of Maxim Gorky and soon came to worship the man who gave them to the world.

Gorky Adopted Him.

"I finally went to the great man and told him my story of forlorn hopes," said Nikolay. "That was eight years ago. He took me into his home and became a father to me. He taught me constantly at home, and finally gave me the opportunity to take a three years' course at the Gymnasium in Nijni-Novgorod. But Gorky is my real teacher after all. I have seen great men and good men, but none who can be compared to father for character. His heart is right. You need not tell him much before his sympathizing heart has grasped your whole story."

Nikolay while at the Gymnasium became editor of a school paper called Youth. One day something appeared in its columns that aroused the suspicion of the Russian secret police. The youth was arrested, and with him his father by adoption. Gorky was kept a prisoner for two weeks, and Nikolay for nearly three months. After his release he was constantly hounded by the agents of the Russian Government, and finally, with M. Gorky's consent he came to America.

Here he has spent a good deal of his time tramping about the country and working at all sorts of things. In that way he has seen many of the great American cities in the East and has gained an intimate acquaintance with the life of poor people. M. Gorky spent years of his youth in the same way, and on these journeys gathered material for some of his greatest stories.

To the young man has been offered an American college education, but he does not desire it, partly because he does not wish to accept anything he has not earned for himself and partly because he has learned to read out of life as out of a book.

"I prefer to travel and read and study at home under the direction of my foster father," he said. "Nobody can appreciate the pleasure of working with him until he has experienced it."

Commissioner of Immigration Watchorn said yesterday that Maxim Gorky will be permitted to land unless he should refuse to answer the usual questions. Among them is: "Are you in favor of law and order?"

RUSSIA WANTS $750,000,000.

If She Can Borrow That Sum the Reformers Will Be Discouraged.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 7.—The Rech says Russia hopes to get $750,000,000 from the loan the Government is now negotiating and that the Government has offered exceptional terms to the bankers in order to conclude the negotiations before the Russian Parliament assembles.

The Radicals generally believe that if the Government succeeds in filling the war chest with such an enormous sum it will be in a position to snap its fingers at Parliament. Only by keeping the Government in dire straits do they believe it will be forced to yield to the popular demands for reform.

Upon the request of the Minister of the Interior the Council of the Empire has increased the appropriation for the Rural Police by over $1,500,000.

PARIS, April 7.—M. Noetzlin of the Netherlands Bank, representing Count Witte, in an interview to-day with Finance Minister Poincaré informed him that the conditions of the Russian loan had been arranged.

M. Noetzlin said he had come to an agreement in London with different English, American, and Continental groups of financiers with regard to the conditions of the issue. German financiers regretted that they were unable to participate in the issue, owing to the forthcoming Prussian and German loans, and the amount of the Russian loan had consequently been reduced.

FAMINE MENACES ECUADOR.

Flour, Corn, Wheat, and Barley to be Admitted Free of Duty.

GUYAQUIL, April 7.—In view of the destruction of the crops, the interior provinces are menaced by famine, and President Alfaro has ordered that flour, corn, wheat, and barley be admitted to the republic free of duty, and that half the customs rate be levied on lard. This decree will be effective for two months.

ZULU REBELS SURROUNDED.

Several Kraals Shelled—Guns Posted in Good Positions.

WITH COL. LEUCHAR'S PUNITIVE FORCE IN NATAL, April 7, by way of Durban.—After an arduous night march the colonial troops occupied a point overlooking Impanza and shelled several kraals.

KOSSUTH IN NEW CABINET.

Also Apponyi and Andrassy—The King Not Going to Budapest.

VIENNA, April 7.—After innumerable conferences to-day, a new Hungarian Cabinet was finally constituted. The appointment of Dr. Alexander Wekerle as Premier for a time seemed doubtful owing to the determined opposition of the Catholic People's Party, which has not forgotten his part in the introduction into Hungary of the civil marriage laws. The members of the Coalition parties, however, firmly stood by Dr. Wekerle and refused to yield to the demands of the Clericals.

Certain of the Ministerial appointments have not yet been made, but it is understood that the Cabinet will be composed as follows:

Minister of the Interior—Count JULIUS ANDRASSY.

Minister of Worship—Count ALBERT APPONYI.

Minister of Commerce—FRANCIS KOSSUTH.

Minister of Agriculture—HERR DARANYI.

Minister of Justice—HERR POLCNYI.

Minister at Court—Count JOHANN ZICHY.

The oaths of office will be administered at Vienna, as the Emperor-King will not be able to go to Budapest.

Francis Kossuth this evening made the following statement:

"I cannot say how soon the military dispute, which at present is in abeyance, will be settled, but a settlement of the constitutional question will be reached as soon as the new Government is organized. Neither Count Apponyi nor I wished to accept any Ministerial post, but finally we agreed to enter the Cabinet in the interest of a solution of the difficulties.

"All that we considered was Hungary's interests and a lasting peace. I am glad to say that the outlook is most hopeful."

Ovation to Marie Hall in London.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 7.—An immense audience gave Marie Hall, the violinist, a remarkable ovation at Queen's Hall this afternoon, when she gave her first recital after her American tour. She was recalled twenty-one times, and there was a great demonstration at the conclusion of the programme.

WITTE WILL FIGHT TREPOFF AND DURNOVO

RUSSIAN OFFICIALS IN PANIC

Czar May Yield to Premier if Radicals Make Sweep, Which They Anticipate.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 7.—A panic has been created in Government circles by the surprising strength developed by the Constitutional Democrats in the elections, which may have immediate and drastic consequences.

The issue between reaction and reform has been unexpectedly precipitated by Premier Witte. The elections have greatly strengthened the Premier's hand in his fight against the Reactionists, and he now feels strong enough to challenge Gen. Trepoff, Minister of the Interior Durnovo, and the entire Reactionary cabal.

Less than a fortnight ago the Premier was decidedly pessimistic and believed that the majority in the Lower House of Parliament would be Conservative, and that the entire programme for reform might be overthrown. The results of the elections, however, have convinced him that the Radicals will control the House, and that an attempt to thwart the popular will as expressed by the ballot box would be a fatal blunder on the part of the Government.

It was learned from an unimpeachable source this evening that the Premier journeyed to Tsarkoe-Selo to lay this view before the Emperor, and made another trip to Tsarkoe-Selo last night and was closeted with his Majesty until after midnight.

Should the Radicals make anything like the sweep which they anticipate, the Emperor will probably be compelled to yield to the Premier's advice. At any rate, Count Witte seems to have aligned himself on the side of the people. In effect he told the Emperor that he regarded the situation as desperate, and that the time had come to choose between himself and M. Durnovo. He counseled his Majesty not only to accept the result of the elections, but to anticipate any demand on the part of the Lower House of Parliament for a Constitution by the promulgation of a Constitution before Parliament convened, and at the same time to mark his change of policy by the proclamation of general amnesty at Easter.

M. Mendelssohn, the armless and legless editor of a local satirical paper, has been sentenced to four months' imprisonment. He was one of the sights of the Nevsky Prospect, where he sat in a pushcart selling his paper.

M. Kamalei, the "jail editor" of the Russ, has also been condemned to four months' imprisonment as the result of the publication in the Russ on April 2 of a travesty of the Lenten prayers. The Russ appeared to-day under the title of The Twentieth Century, but it is believed that the edition will be confiscated.

BOMB KILLS A GOVERNOR.

M. Sleptzoff Assassinated in Tver—Murderer Arrested.

TVER, April 7.—While the Governor of Tver, M. Sleptzoff, was passing through the principal street of the town this afternoon he was killed by the explosion of a bomb.

The Governor, who was in his carriage when he was assassinated, was terribly mutilated, and his coachman was seriously injured. The bomb exploded with terrific force. All the windows in the neighborhood were broken.

The assassin, who is a very young man, was arrested.

At the time of his assassination Sleptzoff was on his way to attend the election of a member of the Council of the Empire.

Sleptzoff was regarded as a very reactionary official, and was held responsible for the beatings administered to the "Intelligents" by the "Black Hundreds" last Autumn.

PRICE ON ENGINEERS' HEADS.

French Strikers Said to Desire Murder of Courrieres Officials.

PARIS, April 7.—The Gaulois says that the striking miners in the Pas-de-Calais are reported to have placed a price on the heads of the engineers of the Courrières mine, and to have designated those who are to assassinate them.

The engineers have been warned and have adopted extreme precautions.

LENS, April 7.—Sixteen more bodies were brought up from the Courrières mine to-day. Another live horse was found, but no more living men have been rescued.

The indignation of the population against the mine management and engineers increases.

Strikers to-day blew up with dynamite fifteen feet of the rails of the bridge at Toquerell.

In an affray to-day between troops and strikers a Lieutenant was seriously wounded.

TOO STRENUOUS FOR BUELOW.

Kaiser Requires the Chancellor to Attend All Sorts of Functions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 7.—The Dresden Neueste Nachrichten, commenting on Prince Bülow's illness, says it is a national duty to relieve the Chancellor of unnecessary work.

The paper asks how it is possible for the Chancellor and the other Ministers to retain sufficient energy to attend to the nation's affairs when they have to be present at continual Court functions, dedications of monuments, and launchings of warships. Even the iron constitution of Bismarck, says the Neueste Nachrichten, could not stand this for long, and by a special order Emperor William I. relieved him of attendance at such ceremonies.

Such an order, says the paper, is needed to relieve Prince Bülow, whose task under the indefatigable Kaiser is even more arduous than was Bismarck's.

BERLIN, April 7.—Chancellor Bülow slept comfortably last night, and his condition is so satisfactory that Prof. Renvers will not issue any more bulletins. The Chancellor received some members of the Foreign Office staff to-day.

The Emperor and Empress to-day sent another immense bouquet of flowers to the Chancellor.

MOROCCAN TREATY SIGNED.

Conference Ended—Kaiser Decorates the German Delegates.

ALGECIRAS, April 7.—The signature of the Moroccan Convention to-day terminated the Conference on Moroccan Reforms, which formally adjourned sine die, after nearly three months of labor.

Henry White, head of the American delegation, made the statement that the United States Government did not accept the obligation of responsibility with regard to the measures necessary to carry out the provisions of the protocol. The signatures of the American delegates were preceded by the words: "Under reserve. This declaration made at a plenary sitting of the conference, April 7, 1906."

PARIS, April 7.—The Foreign Office to-day gave out the text of the Convention for Moroccan Reforms agreed upon by the conference at Algeciras.

It is a formidable document of seven chapters and 123 articles and begins with an impressive introduction, setting forth that the Emperors of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia, the Kings of Belgium, Spain, Great Britain, Italy, Portugal, and Sweden, the Presidents of the United States, and of France, the Sultan of Morocco, and the Queen of the Netherlands, "desiring that order, peace, and prosperity reign in Morocco and recognizing that this precious result is attainable through reforms based on the triple principle of the sovereignty of the Sultan, the integrity of the empire, and economic equality, have assembled their plenipotentiaries to consider the proposed reforms and to determine on the means to apply them."

The most interesting chapter relates to the Moroccan police. It consists of twelve articles and provides for natives as rank and file, Caids as commanders, French and Spanish instructors, and a Swiss Inspector General. The force will consist of 2,500 officers and men distributed at eight ports—Mogador, Saffi, Mazagan, Rabat, Tetuan, Larache, Tangier, and Casablanca.

BERLIN, April 7.—Emperor William has conferred upon Herr von Radowitz the Order of the Black Eagle, the highest Prussian decoration, and upon Count von Tattenbach the Order of the Red Eagle of the first class as rewards for their work at the Algeciras Conference.

GIBRALTAR, April 7.—Ambassador White, the chief American delegate to the conference at Algeciras, sailed for Genoa to-day.

HEIRESS'S EFFORTS FAIL.

LONDON, April 7.—The bye-election yesterday in the Eye Division of Suffolk in consequence of the resignation of F. S. Stevenson resulted in the election of H. Pearson, Liberal, a son of Sir Weetman Pearson, by a majority of 197 over the Marquis of Graham, Conservative, eldest son of the Duke of Montrose.

In the last previous contested election in Eye, in 1900, the Liberal majority was 1,517.

The campaign has been one of the most lively of recent years and was known as the "Ladies' Battle" because the most prominent figures in it were Lady Mary Hamilton, the richest woman of Great Britain, who is engaged to be married to Lord Graham, and the young wife of Mr. Pearson.

The small Liberal majority is chiefly due to the intense popularity in the county of Lady Mary, who appealed personally to the voters and asked them to give her as a wedding present the election to Parliament of her future husband.

KODAMA THE NEW HEAD OF THE JAPANESE ARMY

To Succeed Oyama as Chief of the General Staff.

A WONDERFUL ORGANIZER

Planned the Strategy Which Resulted in His Country's Victories in Manchuria—Educated at Rutgers.

TOKIO, April 7.—Field Marshal Oyama, Chief of the General Staff, is retiring at his own request, and Gen. Baron Kodama, now Governor General of Formosa, will be appointed Chief of the General Staff.

Lieut. Gen. Sakuma will succeed Gen. Kodama as Governor General of Formosa.

Gen. Kodama, who was educated at Rutgers College, has been called the "genius of the Japanese Army." He is credited with having done more than any other man to plan the strategy which resulted in the Japanese victories in Manchuria, where he was Marshal Oyama's Chief of Staff.

"This man is the brains of the Japanese Army," said one correspondent in a letter from Tokio written when the war with Russia was in its first stage. "The great organizer, mobilizer, strategist, or whatever you like to call him. * * * He is hidden away through feelings of modesty and preference, it is said, behind several men of ability who carry higher official titles; but for all that his imperial master the Emperor and his ranking superiors all appreciate his marvelous executive ability and his keen, far-reaching perception of the necessities of war in all their diversified ramifications."

It is said that at any time in the course of the war with Russia Baron Kodama knew exactly where every Japanese regiment was to be found.

Marshal Oyama retires after a career full of triumphs. He saw his first active service in 1868, when he joined his cousins, the Counts Saigo, in leading the revolutionary movement which restored the present Emperor to the throne of his ancestors. He entered that war as a Captain and was made a Major General at the end. In 1870 he was sent by the Emperor to Europe to observe the Franco-Prussian war, and returned to Japan by way of the United States. Oyama later became Vice Minister of War and began to reorganize the Japanese Army. In 1877 he suppressed a rebellion in Southern Japan. In 1880 he was appointed Minister of War, and in 1894, in the war between Japan and China, he was Commander in Chief of the Japanese forces. On his return from the campaign the Emperor made him a Marquis and a Field Marshal.

PIRATES ROB A MISSIONARY.

Chinese Take Clothes, Cash, and Surgical Instruments from Dr. Hager.

HONGKONG, April 7.—Chinese pirates on April 3 held up three passenger boats fourteen miles from Sanshui, not far from Canton, and robbed the Rev. Dr. Charles B. Hager, an American missionary. In an interview here to-day Dr. Hager said:

"Our boat and two others were anchored off a village on the Tung River, when they were simultaneously attacked at night by forty pirates, armed with Mauser rifles. They fired at us and narrowly missed me. The boats were riddled with bullets.

"I was divested of my clothes, cash, and surgical instruments. I have reported the matter to the American Consul at Canton."

Dr. Hager and his wife, Mrs. Marie V. R. Hager, reside in Hongkong. They are Congregationalists and are under the orders of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

POSTAL CONGRESS OPENED.

Delegates from China and Abyssinia Attending Meeting in Rome.

ROME, April 7.—King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena to-day inaugurated the International Postal Congress in the Capitol. Delegates were present from all parts of the world, including Abyssinia and China, which were not represented at the former conferences.

The inaugural address was delivered by Signor Baccelli, the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, who recalled the origin of the Universal Postal Union, referred to the progress made, dwelt upon the fruitful results achieved, and expressed the hope that the deliberations of the present congress would be as beneficial as those of the former congresses.

Then, in the name of the King and amid much applause, Minister Baccelli formally declared the congress open.

The United States is represented at the congress by Capt. Brooks, Supeintendent of Foreign Mails in the United States Post Office Department, and Edward Rosewater of Omaha.

WOULD PLEDGE ALL ZION NOT TO SUPPORT DOWIE

Foes in Church Plan to Prevent Triumph of Old Leader.

TALE OF HIS EXTRAVAGANCE

He Arrives at San Antonio and His Followers There Greet Him Affectionately.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 7.—While John Alexander Dowie is traveling from Mexico City to Zion City measures are being taken by the officers of Zion Church to render him powerless before he can arrive among them. It is asserted that by the time he reaches Zion City the last vestige of his authority will have disappeared except in so far as he may restore it through legal proceedings.

Three hundred officers of the Church have signed a statement upholding General Overseer Voliva in his fight against the "First Apostle." Each member of the Zion City community to-morrow will be asked to swear allegiance to the present officers of the Church, and at the mass meeting which is to be held in the afternoon all of the people will be asked to put their signatures to a document renouncing Dowie.

Overseer Voliva declared to-day that Dowie had lost to the Church in all $2,529,768.71. The present trip in search of health is said to have cost Zion nearly $20,000.

"Two years ago his trip around the world drained Zion of $50,000 more," said Mr. Voliva. "On that trip Dowie tossed about twenty-dollar gold pieces as souvenirs, and at that very time many of our people were struggling to get enough food to keep themselves alive.

"Dowie squandered $100,000 on his Summer home, paying $2,500 for a single launch. For Shiloh House and stables $90,000 was squandered. He paid $17,000 for furnishing his home and $50,000 for the mahogany furniture, books, and other equipment of his office. He overdrew his bank account to the extent of $114,000. His annual household expenditures were $50,000, and he authorized the use of $17,000 for guard uniforms.

"On Christmas Day, 1904, Dowie distributed presents valued at $202,000. This money had been given the Church by various individuals. Among others, women stenographers were recipients. Zion was forced to pay interest on annuity bonds and gifts at the rate of 20 per cent.

"The people contributed altogether for the construction of Shiloh Tabernacle $22,000. Five thousand dollars was given to send missionaries to China, and other offerings were made, but nearly all this was expended for other purposes."

Among those who benefited by Dowie's liberality Voliva named Miss Anna Peters, $1,000; Miss Mary Anderson, $500; Carl Stern, Dowie's former personal attendant, now dead, $10,000; Mrs. Stern, $10,000 and $5,000, and Miss Nielsena Hansen, $10,000.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 7.—John Alexander Dowie arrived here at 1 P. M. to-day over the International & Great Northern Railway from Laredo, and the entire local membership of his church met the Apostle at the station. Apparently to a man they are in accord with the Apostle, and the meeting was impressive.

The feeble old man tottered off the steps of the sleeping car, and was received by a hundred of his own people with bared heads and outstretched hands. He has apartments in the leading hotel of the city. He has declined to see anybody except his immediate party. He will spend Sunday here, and, should his physician permit, it is announced he will speak at the Zionist Temple at the regular afternoon meeting.

He is in feeble health, and seems to be buoyed up only by the mental excitement of the present situation. He expresses confidence that he will be the victor in the Zion City controversy. In his remarks to his people to-day he said:

"The Lord hath given me strength to defeat the enemy."

EXPLAINS YERKES DEAL.

Chicago Union Traction Says His Financial Methods Were Correct.

CHICAGO, April 7.—The Union Traction Company filed in the Federal Court yesterday an answer to the bill of its underlying companies attacking the Consolidated Traction Company. This is the suit in which the financial methods of the late Charles T. Yerkes are attacked and the plea made that the Consolidated Company really belongs to underlying companies.

The complaint was mainly that the Consolidated Company was built by the credit and with the cash of the North and West Chicago companies at the time Mr. Yerkes had control of them, and the property, instead of being taken by him, should have been turned over to them.

The answer in effect says that so far as the Union Traction Company knows the financial methods of Charles T. Yerkes were correct. The Union Traction admits that it gave Yerkes bonds of the Consolidated in exchange for his stock in the latter company at the rate of $45 in bonds to $100 in stock, but says it was necessary for it to get control of the property, and it was protecting the stockholders in the underlying companies when it did it.

It denies that it entered into the trade with Yerkes whereby it got control of the underlying and formed the Union Traction Company over night. The claim is made that the matter was investigated thoroughly and Yerkes was forced to make good doubtful securities amounting to $1,563,200 before the bargain finally was struck.

SUICIDE IN A CELL.

A well-dressed man, who said he was Isaac Newmark, and who was locked up on a charge of passing a worthless check, hanged himself in his cell in the East 104th Street Station last night with the lining of his coat, which he attached to the top of the cell.

Newmark, who said he was 34 years old, and gave his address as 12-14 East 103d Street, was arrested an hour before on the complaint of Samuel Rothenberg, a butcher, of 230 East Ninety-ninth Street.

Rothenberg said that the man entered his butcher shop about 7:30 last night and ordered a steak and some chops. Newmark showed particular care in the choosing of the meat, and this, with his refined manner, disarmed Rothenberg of any scruples the butcher might have had in accepting a check from a stranger.

The check was for $14.60, and was drawn on the State Bank of Grand Street and made payable to S. Silvermann. It was indorsed with that name. The butcher's bill was $3.50. Rothenberg accepted the check and gave Newmark $11.10 in change. The man asked that the meat be sent immediately to an address in 100th Street.

Rothenberg sent his messenger boy with the meat a few moments after Newmark left the shop. The boy returned saying that there was no one of the name of Newmark at the address given. Rothenberg notified the police, and a general alarm was sent out with a full description of Newmark.

About 9 o'clock Policeman Simony, in whose beat the butcher's shop is situated, called in at the store to ask Rothenberg why he hadn't called him while there was a chance to get Newmark in the neighborhood. While they were talking together Rothenberg saw Newmark across the street. The moment Simony approached him Newmark ran, but was captured after a short chase.

The man was apparently deeply moved by his arrest. He pleaded that he had not meant any injury to Rothenberg, and said that he had intended to refund the money. He was then taken to a cell.

About 10 o'clock Doorman Donahue found Newmark all right, but a few minutes later Donahue again looked into Newmark's cell and saw him dangling from the cell roof. Newmark was cut down quickly. He was still breathing, but was dead before a doctor arrived from the Harlem Hospital.

Investigation showed that the man had first tried to hang himself with his suspenders. These lay broken on the floor. The material with which the man had killed himself was the lining of his coat, which he had torn out and twisted into a rope. This he had tide to the roof of the cell where holes for ventilation had been cut.

RANCHER TO BE MARSHAL.

He Was Foreman When Mr. Roosevelt Was a Ranchman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—President Roosevelt to-day informed Senator Carter and other Montana men that he would like to appoint A. W. Merrifield United States Marshal in that State.

Merrifield was Mr. Roosevelt's ranch foreman in the days when the President was a ranchman. They used to round up cattle and hunt together. Now Merrifield has a ranch of his own. The Montana men acquiesced.

The present Marshal is Col. Charles F. Lloyd, who was an officer in Grigsby's Rough Rider Regiment in the Spanish war. Like the other Rough Rider regiments, except the Roosevelt one, the Grigsby outfit never got a chance to get to the front.

A GOVERNMENT LINE PAYS.

Receipts of the Alaska Cable and Telegraph Service Grow.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Alaskan cable and telegram tolls paid to the United States Government in March aggregated $14,500, and exceeded the receipts for any previous month. In the fiscal year which ended last June the Government collected more than $100,000 in tolls, and the War Department expects that the amount taken in for the current year will be at least 50 per cent greater.

REPUBLICAN ATTACKS LEAD TRUST IN HOUSE

Perkins of Rochester Says Tariff Gives It $7,500,000 Profit.

WARNS PARTY OF DISASTER

If They Do Not Grant Revision, He Declares, the People Will Punish Them.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—More trust and tariff talk occupied the House to-day. This time the speaker was a Republican from Rochester, N. Y.—James B. Perkins—and his target was the Lead Trust. The Democrats were made happy by the spectacle of Republican dissension. Mr. Perkins's talk, following so closely upon the attack on the Watch Trust by Representative Rainey, has revived hope among the revisionists.

Mr. Perkins said that, notwithstanding the declaration of his colleague, Mr. Payne, that "there might seem little necessity for discussing questions referring to the tariff," the discussion would not cease even if the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee wanted it to.

"Good friends of the tariff have always desired that any changes in it should be made by the Republican Party," he continued, "but it needs no prophet to see that if the Republican Party will not make any changes they will some day be made by those whose action will be less considerate, less friendly, and less wise."

Mr. Perkins remarked that he was little interested in the outcry against so-called trusts. Many of them were the necessary results of commercial development. But when the Government is found, by the operation of its laws, helping to build up a combination that controls an important branch of business, pouring into its pockets millions of dollars that are taken out of the pockets of others, then a different question is presented.

"Its common stock," he said, "represents not a dollar of property, but only the hope of profit. Every dollar of it was pure, unadulterated water, not polluted by even a dollar's worth of anything substantial or of value."

Then he told how the trust controls 90 per cent. of the lead production of the United States, and through this production controls the entire market.

"The old theory that the price of an article in this country is enhanced by the full amount of the tariff upon it is not true," said Mr. Perkins, "whenever there is competition in the production of the article in this country. But when there is no competition, when a trust has monopolized the production and market, as in the case of lead, then it is true. And that is just what the Lead Trust has done."

Mr. Perkins quoted domestic and foreign prices to prove his assertion, and to show the size of the resultant profits to the trust.

"The Lead Trust sells approximately 300,000,000 pounds a year," he said, "and its profits from the operation of the present tariff are from $7,500,000 to $10,000,000 a year. If its profits were $7,500,000 less a year it would still earn enough to pay dividends on the preferred stock, which represents every dollar of property put into the organization. In other words, this tariff-made profit pays the dividends on $100,000,000 of stock which represents nothing but the paper on which it is printed.

"Is that schedule to be forever maintained which makes possible the creation of imaginary capital and yields a substantial profit on such a creation? Simply because to discuss their possible revision may excite public animadversion is it wise that such schedules are forever closed? I have no general sympathy with the phrase 'The tariff is the mother of trusts,' but sometimes we do see a monster that does look as if it owed to the tariff its birth and its growth.

"Object lessons like this may not be considered by the legislators who are opposed to any tariff legislation, but sooner or later it is probable that they will have their effect upon the people who choose the legislators."

GREATEST BLOT ON NATION.

Representative Pou Thinks It Is Corporation Campaign Activity.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—During the general debate on the Post Office Appropriation bill in the House this afternoon Mr. Pou of North Carolina submitted a few remarks on "What I Believe to Be the Greatest Blot on the Good Name of the Great American Nation," to wit, corporation contributions to the campaign funds of political parties.

In doing so he brought out some fervent criticism of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President, because it has not done anything with some of the nine bills referred to it at this session, all of which bear on this subject. Some of the minority members of the committee made bitter complaint because the Chairman, Representative Gaines of West Virginia, had not seemed intensely eager to get after the corporations with a big stick.

After rapping the committee sharply for its inaction, Mr. Pou went into the general subject. "It was with humiliation and shame," he said, "that I learned that the officers of one insurance company had stolen $40,000 to help elect Theodore Roosevelt to the Presidency. Part of that was my money, for I am one of the unfortunates who hold policies in that company.

"No wonder we are witnessing such a struggle at the other end of the Capitol between the railroads and the people! It is because during campaigns the great corporations fix themselves with the party in power."

WASHINGTON'S NEW STATION.

President Cassatt Will Open Pennsylvania's Shorter Line on Thursday.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—President Cassatt of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with a party of officials of the road, will come to Washington on April 12 to inaugurate the line which connects the old Pennsylvania tracks with the new Union Station, now in course of construction.

The new line runs from Magruder station into the terminal, and it will be possible to run the Cassatt private train from Philadelphia into the train shed. Only one track will be completed, but this will answer for the purpose of inauguration in what is a notable improvement in railroad terminal facilities in this city.

NEW TREATY WITH CUBA.

Island Republic Compelled to Make More Tariff Concessions.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Edwin Morgan, American Minister, has been in conference with the officials of the Cuban Foreign Office for some time past with the purpose of framing a new reciprocity treaty. A convention has been drafted that may be ready for submission to the Senate before the adjournment of the present session.

The reason for the preparation of the new treaty is that the officials here have become convinced that America is getting by far the worst of the bargain under the present arrangement, which will last for three years longer. While nearly all of the exports from Cuba come to our ports, only a little more than one-third of the imports into Cuba are from America.

Some changes of great importance have been made in the tariff schedules. In all cases these are calculated to increase the advantages to American shippers.

The Cuban Government did not care to make these concessions, but it was confronted with the fact that otherwise there would be no treaty at all at the expiration of the present convention.

BARNES CASE IN HOUSE.

Move to Stop Carpet Bagging in District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Feeling against the appointment as Postmaster at Washington of Benjamin F. Barnes, one of the President's secretaries, and the man who had Mrs. Minor Morris dragged from the White House, came out in the House to-day.

A resolution was introduced by Representative Sims of Tennessee providing that appointments to offices relating to the local government of the District of Columbia shall be made from residents of the district.

Although Barnes has been in Washington holding office for many years, he has kept his residence in New Jersey.

OVERSTREET REBUFFED THE POSTAL LEAGUE

Organization, However, Will Force a Hearing on the New Rate Bill.

MANY PETITIONS CIRCULATED

Secretary Cowles Says Chairman of the House Committee Stands Alone in Opposing the Bill.

Rebuffed by Representative Jesse Overstreet, Chairman of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the officers of the Postal Progress League have set out to make him retract his refusal to give them a hearing. They—together with hundreds of persons, including three ex-Postmasters General—want to have a bill passed consolidating third and fourth class mail matter. Mr. Overstreet doesn't believe the bill is a good one, and doesn't hesitate to say so.

Third class mail matter is "merchandise" and goes at 8 cents a pound, while the rate for fourth class matter, "merchandise" of other kinds, is 16 cents. Some of the things to which the higher rate applies are blank books, peas, beans, and playing cards, but there are many more besides.

The names of John Wanamaker, James A. Gary, and Gen. Thomas L. James, every one of whom has been Postmaster General, are signed to one petition asking for the passage of the bill by both houses of Congress. Other petitions, with the same object, bear the names of Mayors of cities, officers and members of various trade leagues throughout the country, and of State Legislatures. The provisions of the bill are as follows:

> Section 1.—That the third and fourth classes of mail matter be and hereby are consolidated under the title "merchandise" at the third-class rate, 1 cent per each two ounces, 8 cents per pound.

James L. Cowles, Secretary and Treasurer of the Postal Progress League, returned from Washington yesterday. There he had an interview with Mr. Overstreet. It was not encouraging.

"Mr. Overstreet coolly refused to hold a hearing on the bill," said Mr. Cowles. "That's because he's against it. When I showed him that petition with the names of Wanamaker and James and Gary, he said: 'That petition itself is the best argument against the bill.'

"Now we have a right to have a hearing whether Mr. Overstreet is against the bill or not. Judge Goebel of Cincinnati is a member of the committee and he told me he was in favor of giving us a hearing. Other members are, too. In refusing to allow it, Mr. Overstreet is interfering with the fundamental right of petition, a right that has been sacred for a century.

"He won't hear us willingly, so now we are going to force him to, whether he wants to or not. We have too strong a force on our side for him to hold out against us long. The Legislature of Massachusetts has passed a resolution in favor of the bill, and the lower houses in Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and California have taken the same action. There seems to be no opposition to the bill except on the part of Mr. Overstreet himself.

"Postmaster General Cortelyou recommended its passage. When I was in Washington Mr. Overstreet said to me: 'The Postmaster General is not as strong for it now as he was.' Whereupon I went to the Postmaster General and found out that he was just as much in favor of it as ever."

In a pamphlet containing reasons for the consolidation of third and fourth class matter, the Postal Progress League gives a comparison of the rates now and the rates in 1874. Then all merchandise went for 8 cents a pound; now a big part of it comes in the 16-cent class, and the rate is higher within the United States than between this country and Mexico. An eleven-pound package, according to the pamphlet, goes from here to Mexico for $1.32, but to send eleven pounds from one State to another, it must be divided into three parcels, and will cost $1.76.

SIBLEY ON POSTAL EXPENSE.

Declares the Railroads Are Not Overpaid for Carrying Mails.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Representative Sibley of Pennsylvania, in the House to-day, replied to charges that the railways are largely overpaid for handling the mails. As a member of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee he said he desired to put before the members of the House the facts in relation to railway mail pay without hysteria.

"The cost of our entire Post Office establishment," Mr. Sibley said, "is now approaching $200,000,000 a year. Who carries these letters of ours? The railroads. Do we pay the two hundred millions to the railroads? By no means; not much more than one dollar in five is paid to the railroads."

He said the pound rate service, the carriage of second-class matter at one cent per pound for the benefit of newspapers and magazine publishers, was a luxury and a very expensive one, and cited the Postmaster General, who represented that the matter of the second-class approximates in weight two-thirds of the bulk of all mail matter, yet produced only about 4 per cent. of the revenue.

EATON FAILS TO KILL PRINTERS' UNION CHARGES

They Said Book Concern Printed Whisky Advertisements.

WARM CONFERENCE DEBATE

Typographical Union No. 6 yesterday induced the ministers who are holding the New York East Conference of the Methodist Church in the New York Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, to investigate the charges made by the Defense Committee of the union against the Rev. Dr. Homer Eaton and the Rev. George P. Mains, managers of the Methodist Book Concern, that they had knowingly printed whisky advertisements.

The end was not accomplished until after a stormy debate. In the end the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of The Christian Advocate, the floor leader of the Conference, was defeated. He held that no attention should be paid to the charges for the reason that the accusers were acting in bad faith, and also because the Conference had no jurisdiction.

The matter was brought before the conference by a resolution offered by the Rev. J. Wesley Johnston, pastor of the John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Manhattan, in which the charges were referred to a committee of five, who were to report back to the conference. This resolution was afterward altered so as to refer the case to the local publication board of the General Conference, and in this shape it was passed.

A letter read by the Rev. A. B. Sanford, Secretary of the conference, which was sent to him Friday by the Chairman of the Defense Committee of the union, was ordered read despite the objection of Dr. Buckley, who had just declared that the charges "had fallen as flat as a drunken man pushed from a saloon." The writer of this letter declared that the union was prepared to prove its assertions that Messrs. Eaton and Mains had accepted whisky advertisements for printing, and had printed other objectionable matter. Referring to the statements made in the conference last Thursday to the effect that the charges were due to "Romanism" in the union; the letter said:

> Only the mind diseased or incapable of realizing the gross hypocrisy of the present management would make such an assertion.

"Dr. Eaton didn't; I did," said Bishop McCabe, at which there was a general laugh.

The letter went on to say that the writer of it, the Chairman of the Defense Committee, was a Methodist, having been baptized and admitted to the church in the Ashgrove Methodist Episcopal Church of Albany.

Dr. Buckley, with an expression of doubt on his face, here arose and asked whether the writer had signed his name. Dr. Sanford replied that he had. His name was T. F. Douglas.

When the letter had been read some question as to its legality as a Conference document arose. The Secretary said that when he received it he referred it to Bishop McCabe. The Bishop then caused another laugh at the expense of Dr. Buckley when he said:

"Yes, and I referred the whole thing to Archbishop Buckley."

Dr. Buckley hastened to explain that he had never attempted to influence the Bishop or to run a Conference, but he believed that under the Discipline, a Bishop had the right to dispose of accusations against his ministers personally.

There has been a strike on among the printers in the Methodist Book Concern, and much bitter feeling has been aroused by the charges.

The Conference will end its labors for the year on Tuesday evening, when Bishop McCabe will announce the pastoral changes.

HAD MIZNER IN COURT.

Subpoena Server Says He Was Beaten —$46 Wanted for Press Clippings.

That Wilson Mizner patronized a press-clipping bureau while he and the widow of Charles T. Yerkes figured prominently in the day's news just before and after their marriage was alleged yesterday in a case that came up in the West Side Court, where the young Californian was charged with having assaulted the day before a subpoena server from the office of a Nassau Street lawyer.

Benjamin Friedman of 12 Division Street, the plaintiff, said that he had served a summons upon Mizner on Friday in the latter's apartments at the Hotel Seymour, 44 West Forty-fifth Street. The summons, it is alleged, called upon Mizner to show cause why he should not pay $46 to Walker Hymans for supplying him with newspaper clippings.

Friedman said that Mizner jumped on him, beat him in the face, and threw him into hall. Mizner said that Friedman had gained access to his room under pretense of having a letter from Chicago to deliver to him, but that he had used only enough force to eject the subpoena server.

Mizner was discharged.

Rockefeller Buys $20,000 of Its Stock—$250,000 Needed.

The Directors of the new Brooklyn Academy of Music, for the building of which a fund is being raised by popular subscription, announced yesterday that $750,000 had been subscribed. This leaves $250,000 of the proposed million-dollar fund to be raised. The work of building the Academy, which is to occupy the entire block on the south side of Lafayette Avenue, between St. Felix Street and Ashland Place, will be begun in the early part of the Summer.

John D. Rockefeller has subscribed to $20,000 of the stock of the new academy. The new academy is to take the place of the old building in Montague Street, which was destroyed by fire several years ago.

ECKMANN PETITION, TOO.

Goldberger Says He Signed Names Taken from City Record.

Assemblyman Max Eckmann of the Twelfth District, who was elected on the Republican and Municipal Ownership tickets last Fall, spent several hours with Assistant District Attorney Krotel yesterday. It was learned that Benjamin M. Goldberger, the clerk in the Register's office who is under arrest charged with having filed forged petitions for the nomination of William R. Hearst for Mayor, has confessed that he got up the petition for Eckmann's nomination, too. Goldberger said that every signature obtained by him on that petition is a forgery.

Two successive petitions filed for Eckmann last Fall were thrown out by the Board of Elections on complaints by representatives of the Democratic organization. Goldberger, it is said, undertook to arrange a wholly new petition, and he says now that he did it by copying names wholesale from The City Record. Even if his confession be corroborated, this will not affect the status of Eckmann.

George H. Hyman, one of the notaries who acknowledged the signatures on the Hearst petition, was examined at the District Attorney's office yesterday afternoon and furnished additional information bearing on the investigation.

OUR TRAVEL AND LONDON'S.

New York's Passengers More Than Double Those of English City.

In view of the showing made by the transit lines of this city in the annual report of the State Railroad Commission, it is interesting to compare the number of passengers carried with those transported by the railways and omnibuses of London during the same period.

Statistics prepared by The Railway News of that city show that the omnibuses, trolleys, and underground railways of London carried, in 1905, 604,834,000 passengers, as compared with 596,344,528 in 1904, an increase of 8,489,472. The State Commission's figures show that the elevated, surface, and subway lines in New York City carried 1,442,347,122 during 1905 and 1,341,039,409 in 1904, an increase of 101,307,713, or more than twice the number carried by the transportation lines of London.

It should be remembered that the State Railroad Commission's statistics include only the passenger traffic of those lines within the boundaries of Greater New York and do not take into account the immense travel over the vast trolley systems in the New Jersey and Westchester suburbs.

This, however, is partly offset by the large number of people carried by cabs in London, the cab traffic in New York being comparatively insignificant.

BULL KILLED A STALLION.

A Savage Battle to the Death—The Victim Wore a Red Blanket.

After a fierce battle, an angry bull gored to death, Friday evening, a $2,000 stallion belonging to a resident of the Bronx, on Philip Hofner's farm, near Salem, N. J. The stallion had been sent to the Hofner farm for care and training. The freedom of the fields was allowed the animal, and when one of the stablemen, John Breen, went for him on Friday he succeeded in getting him only after a long chase.

The horse was warm as the result of the chase and Breen threw over him a red blanket. His path lay through a field in which a herd of cows were grazing. The stallion had scarcely stepped into the field when a bull that Breen did not know was there came dashing with lowered horns from among the cows.

The stallion struck the bull with his fore feet and bit him savagely, the fight continuing for several minutes, during which time Breen and another man tried vainly to separate the combatants. They were at length forced to retire, one with a broken arm and Breen with a finger bitten off.

Finally the bull managed to get from under and retreated a few paces. Then he whirled and came back full tilt with his horns lowered. The assault was terrific and the bull buried his horns three or four inches under the stallion's ribs, so that the latter died within a few minutes.

MRS. STOKES CRITICISES CHARITABLE SOCIETIES

Says Methods They Pursue Sometimes Are Most Harmful.

DISCUSSES WORKING WOMEN

Mrs. Frederick Nathan and E. A. Filene Also Speak Before Academy of Political and Social Science.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—The final sessions of the tenth annual meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Science were held to-day. "The Condition of Working Women in the United States" was the topic discussed at to-night's session, and among the speakers was Mrs. J. G. Phelps Stokes of New York, who was Miss Rose Pastor. She said:

"Much of the hardship of the working classes is consequent upon the fact that they are obliged, not merely to support their own families, but to contribute, whether they will or not, to the support of other families, which live in idleness and luxury upon the products of the working people's toil. It is the nearly universal recognition of this fact among the working people of our country that leads more than all else to strikes and industrial disturbances, to ill-will, to class hatred, and to that craving for larger justice which underlies the Socialistic programme.

"The working woman sees, or at least feels, that excessive toil on her part would be unnecessary if the burdens of production were more fairly distributed, and if waste prevailed less widely. Excessive hours of toil and consequent craving for relaxation and refreshment lead naturally to the seeking of gayety or recreation after the day's work is done, and conditions under which alone gayety and recreation can be had by the average working girl in our large cities are far from conducive to the highest standards of living.

"Many troubles are caused to the less serious-minded working girls through natural, though foolish, attempts to imitate the habits and dress of those who live and dress extravagantly. Money needed for the relief and aid of a sick neighbor, or for food or clothing for a younger brother or sister, is often squandered on imitation jewels or other finery, where no other motive exists than one of vanity and vainglory prompted by the extravagance and ostentation of the rich.

"The workingwoman knows that there is no true charity except where there is true sympathy, and that true sympathy can exist only in proportion as there is true understanding of personal needs and feelings. Most self-respecting workingwomen would rather go without asking for aid of any kind until they are half-starved and half-frozen than accept the doles of hard-hearted men in high places or by the doles of ostentation.

"Even when charitable societies seek in as kind a manner as they know how to provide relief for those genuinely in need the methods which they sometimes pursue to ascertain the reality of the need are most harmful.

"This prevailing distinction that is commonly made between 'worthy' and 'unworthy' applicants for relief is most mistaken and unfortunate. No man or woman is so degraded as to be unworthy of aid to a better and worthier life. The relief must be suited to the sufferer, but relief of the right kind need never be withheld."

Edward A. Filene of Boston said he believed that practically all the present evils could be remedied by vocational industrial public education, the effective organization of working women, and more sympathy and understanding.

"The worst conditions are found in factories, workshops, laundries, and similar institutions in cities," he said. "The fundamental cause lies in the fact that great numbers of women and girls are forced to work who have never been trained to work—who do not know how to work—who do not know how to keep themselves well—who lack the qualities necessary to enforce their rights—who lack the intelligence necessary to organize for their rights and society's rights—who lack sufficient will power.

"When the untrained worker is no longer suitable to replace the average workers, then it will be far more possible to organize women workers in unions."

In an address on "Women Who Work and Women Who Spend," Mrs. Frederick Nathan, President of the Consumers' League, New York, said that if many philanthropic women who have larger incomes than they care to spend on themselves, and who give away large sums of money in order to provide funds for working girls who have broken down physically, mentally or morally, had taken the precaution to spend their money while providing for their own wants in such a way as to create favorable conditions for working girls, the workers in all probability would not have broken down and would not have required aid.

BIG DIAMOND IMPORTATION.

Jacob Dreicer, a diamond importer of 292 Fifth Avenue, who was a passenger on the French line steamship La Lorraine yesterday, brought to this country the greatest number of unset diamonds ever imported in a single lot since the collection intended for the St. Louis Exposition came over. The diamonds brought in by Mr. Dreicer were valued at $72,000 and were sent to the Public Stores for appraisal.

Customs Inspector O'Donnell, while on duty on the pier, saw one of La Lorraine's passengers, who later gave his name as M. Payen, open his trunk before the customs officer examined it. O'Donnell saw the man take two tissue paper packages from the trunk and transfer them to his pockets.

Upon examining the packages O'Donnell found that they contained two rings, one of which was set with diamonds, two large cameo brooches, one gold bracelet, and a set of ear rings studded with small diamonds. Payen said he had forgotten to declare them. He was allowed to pay $350 duty on them after O'Donnell had examined his trunks and found some more jewelry.

MRS. MACKAY'S CHURCH FUND.

She's Raising $50,000 for New Building for Trinity Church, Roslyn.

Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay of Harbor Hill, near Roslyn, L. I., did not consider that she had done enough for the Episcopalians of Roslyn when she gave $20,000 for a memorial parish house for Trinity Church. The parish house was given in memory of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Duer, and is now in course of erection. Mrs. Mackay thinks the parish should have a new church edifice, but that it is desirable to arouse the interest of the people and so make them feel that the church when built is their own, erected by their own efforts.

Mrs. Mackay has therefore sent an appeal to each of 250 persons, asking them to give to the fund for the new church. It is her expectation to raise $45,000 or $50,000 and to build a handsome stone edifice to replace the old-fashioned structure now in use. She has had McKim, Mead & White prepare tentative plans of such a building as she believes will be appropriate for Roslyn.

TWAIN AND SIR PURDON LAUD SMITH GRADUATES

GALA DAY AT HOTEL ASTOR

Miss Peck Says She Will Climb the Highest Mountain on This Hemisphere.

The New York Alumnae of Smith College, the "Smith College Club of New York," held its eleventh annual luncheon at the Hotel Astor yesterday afternoon with many interesting events. The first was the election by acclamation of Mark Twain as the annual guest of the club.

Mr. Clements is not making speeches at the girls' clubs he visits nowadays. He tells a story and they let him off at that. Yesterday he told the always interesting one of taking a girl to the theatre and of his tight shoes, and how he walked gallantly home with the shoes on one arm and the girl on the other. But Mark Twain can't tell a story and nothing else, so he had to tell the Smith girls just how nice he thought them.

"When I come to a gathering like this," he said, "I feel that I should like to be an aspirant for political honors; I should like to be elected the belle of New York so that I could come to these luncheons all the time."

Then it was that the girls rose en masse, created a new office, and elected Mark Twain as "Annual Guest" to fill it. And the "Annual Guest," who had talked at bouillon time that he might get off early, went away and didn't take luncheon with the girls at all.

Sir Casper Purdon Clarke spoke at the regular speech-making time at the end of the dinner, and it was then that he told the Smith girls that he would have to apologize to them because a good many years ago he had crossed the ocean on purpose to see Smith College as a sample of what might be done with an English girls' college, and had then found Wellesley so satisfactory that after visiting Vassar he had gone home without seeing Smith at all.

"I had come to study colleges architecturally and not institutionally," he said, "and I thought Wellesley, representing the ideas of a woman, could not be improved upon." The Smith girls applauded heartily.

"Mark Twain," said Sir Purdon, in closing his remarks, "is, I think, better known and better loved in England than he is here. He is one of the most lovable and best men in the world."

Miss Annie Peck, the mountain climber, told the club how pleased she was when she heard the Smith girls speaking of her as "our Miss Peck," because she had once been a teacher in the college.

Miss Peck told the club something of her experiences, of how she first climbed the Matterhorn, acquired a reputation for mountain climbing, and felt that she must make good her reputation by going into it in earnest.

"Mount Sorento, was the first mountain I ever tried to climb and didn't succeed," she said. "I tried twice. Once my money gave out and a second time the men who were with me gave out. They wouldn't go more than half way up. Now I am going to find the highest mountain on this hemisphere and climb that, and then I am going back to get the best of Mount Sorento."

President Seelye of the college told the girls that they had just as much right to intellect as men, and that their brains were as good, but that they must remember that womanliness is as important for a woman as manliness for a man.

"College women are trying, like Miss Peck," he said, "to reach the highest point, the highest altitude, but it is the highest altitude of womanhood, and not manhood. The trouble in some women's colleges is that they try to imitate the men. There are some things that men do that women should not."

Dr. Seelye said Andrew Carnegie, who has offered the college $62,000 on condition that it raise a like amount, for a biological laboratory, has given the authorities the privilege to use the money for a library, which is much needed. Mr. Rockefeller has given $100,000 for an endowment fund and a like amount for an assembly hall and dormitory.

Gov. Pattison's Good Day.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 7.—Reports reluctantly made at 10 o'clock to-night by the attendants at Christ Hospital were to the effect that Gov. Pattison was resting and still showing symptoms of regaining strength. Most vigorous denial was given to-night by a doctor belonging to the staff of the hospital of the report of mental collapse. It is true, however, that he is frequently delirious.

MUCHA POSTERS AT THE ARTS.

Exhibition of Placarcs and Magazine Covers by Various Hands.

One of the galleries at the National Arts Club contains a one-man show, consisting of a portion of the work of Alphonse Mucha, a master in the art of posters, who has transferred his atelier from Paris to New York. Mucha is a native of Bohemia, but for many years France was his adopted country.

The place of honor is a composition in pale pinks and gold surrounded by a deep border with an original treatment of flowers, the subject of the poster referring to "Quo Vadis." It is a scene of revelry, remarkable for its handsome lines and clever management of draperies. Another large color composition is styled "Sketch for a Church Painting in Jerusalem." An angel seems to be protecting a young girl clad in Syrian costume, and in the background is a great face emerging from the obscurity. What will prove particularly worth examination is the series of one hundred decorative designs in black and white, into which not only flowers but birds, animals, and human figures are introduced with a personal touch and admirable art. M. Mucha shows an extraordinary power in seizing the spirit of an object and presenting it in a conventional and decorative way. Carvers and potters might study them to advantage, also textile workers and designers of wallpapers. Most of them form part of a large series of drawings for "Documents de la Décoration," a publication for students of decorative design, while others belong to "Figures dans la Décoration." There are four illustrations in colors to the Lord's Prayer, and three portraits in pastel, the largest of which is a lady in an armchair, illuminated by a fire as she sits near an unseen hearth. Here again we see a masterly swing of lines in draperies and figure, the color scheme being delicate rather than rich.

The other gallery has foreign and native work in posters and magazine covers, catalogues, and illustrated placards. By Cazodelvaille is a poster announcing a Tournoi de Chevalerie du XV. Siècle at Brussels, in which knights and their chargers, covered with brilliant hangings, on which are coats of arms, meet in the glorious shock of spears. Another Belgian poster by Michel summons the public to Fêtes Jubiliaires. A big French poster by Steinlen for the Salons d'Exposition Permanente shows a dozen Parisian street types of different ranks, ages, and occupations. Bernard B. de Monvel and F. Toussaint are also represented.

Mr. Edward Penfield has some small but good pieces—a Dutchman with big trousers, red jacket, pipe in mouth, who stands on a wooden bridge with a windmill in the immediate background, and some clever cats done by stencil. Mr. Everitt Shinn has sketches for piano decoration and Mr. Chester Loomis a poster for the Bridge Department with a woman's figure in the foreground. Mr. John Cecil Clay has an old clown called "The Past," a lad blowing the classical double pipe called "Youth," and a girl's head against a big yellow moon, called "The Moth."

A handsome poster is "The Color Grinder," by George Wharton Edwards, a powerful young man between rude columns carved with Norse interlacing design who grinds colors on a slab of stone. The mass of red paint forms a very effective centre to the composition. "The Golden Galleon" shows the stern of a Spanish man-of-war with the poop rising in a maze of stories and gilded decorations. In the foreground to right and left are Tritons "winding their wreathed horns." There are clever compositions for cover or placard by Mr. James Preston and Mr. Frederic Dorr Steele.

The seven exhibits by Mr. Walter Walz Fawcett include a design for cover with a graceful woman in big straw hat and crinoline who stands among flowers and holds a pot of flowers in her arms. There are posters for the Department of Health and other city interests by Mrs. Ella Condie Lamb.

Posters take up a great deal of space, so that many can not be shown in galleries of moderate size. But enough are here to provide a very enjoyable hour in their examination.

TALLY SHEETS "FIXED."

Hearst Men Testify to Election Frauds Before Assembly Committee.

William C. Reddy's contest for the seat of Assemblyman J. Sidney Bernstein of the Thirty-first Manhattan District came before the Assembly Committee on Privileges and Elections yesterday at a meeting held at the Hotel Cadillac. Reddy was the Municipal Ownership League candidate, while Bernstein is a Tammany man.

Two witnesses for the contestants said that the Democratic and Municipal Ownership League election officers in the Forty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Election Districts, at the conclusion of the count, when the Inspectors' tally sheets did not agree, split the difference between the Democratic and Municipal Ownership League candidates. Other witnesses testified that the Tammany Inspectors were big men, and frightened the other inspectors into countenancing the frauds.

While the committee announced no action on the contest, it was conceded after the session that the recount of the void and protested ballots would favor Bernstein, who had an apparent plurality of 78 on the face of the returns.

COUPLE IN AUTO SEEK PREACHER TO WED THEM

Vain Search Lasting All Night—Alderman Ties Knot.

DONE ON SUDDEN IMPULSE

Machine Broke Down and Young Brooklyn Man Suddenly Proposed a Secret Wedding.

In her apartments in the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn Heights, yesterday, a Brooklyn girl, Miss Niesze Van der Velde, that was, received a steady procession of congratulating callers and smilingly narrated to them the sympthy-exciting story of her "gasoline elopement" with Alva E. Beebe, a tale of a strenuous and distressing automobile hunt for a clergyman, ending with the tying of the nuptial knot in the City Hall by an accommodating Alderman.

Mr. Beebe, who is 24 years old, is a son of William H. Beebe, a wealthy retired commission merchant, living at 48 St. Paul's Court. He is a member of the Crescent Athletic, Knickerbocker Field, Round Table, and other clubs. Miss Van der Velde, or Mrs. Beebe, as she is now, is a daughter of Nicholas Van der Velde of 211 Prospect Place, and well known on the Park Slope.

Mr. Beebe and Miss Van der Velde have known each other for months. As they stated last night, they became engaged, but did not make any announcement of the fact to their families.

Recently Beebe became the owner of a fine touring automobile. On Thursday afternoon, with Miss Van der Velde and a friend, K. Trowbridge Erwin, he went down to Bath Beach in his car, having dinner there. It was about midnight when the party started to return.

On the Ocean Parkway something went wrong with the machine. Beebe crawled under the car, and while tinkering with the machinery and covering himself with grease and dirt, became greatly distressed over the fact that Miss Van der Velde was being kept out so late.

"Say, Niesze," said he, after a time, crawling from under the machine and dramatically pointing the monkey wrench at her, "we've been thinking about getting married for some time; let's do it now."

Miss Van der Velde said something about it being "so sudden," but Beebe had become inspired and would have only one answer. And so it was, after the automobile had been put in running order again, that they started off with friend Erwin to hunt for a clergyman. But not in the whole borough could they find a minister who would be routed out to perform the ceremony at that hour.

At 5 o'clock in the morning their quest led them to the Adams Street Station. There the bridegroom caused a sensation by announcing to Sergt. McNulty that he wanted the Police Department to aid him in finding a minister who would marry him and Miss Van der Velde. The Sergeant regretted that the police couldn't take it upon themselves to pull any unwilling clergyman out of bed at daybreak to accommodate the couple, and Beebe continued his hunt.

After having breakfast at the Hotel St. George and putting up the automobile at a garage, the party went to the Butler Street Court to enlist the services of Magistrate Tighe. The Magistrate was too busy to do any marrying, and, in sheer desperation, they crossed the bridge to Manhattan.

"If we can't get any one else to marry us, the Mayor'll do it," declared Beebe.

But the Mayor was not in his office in the City Hall, and the trio, discouraged and tired, but following a forlorn hope, sought the Aldermanic chamber. There they met Alderman James J. Smith of the Corlears Hook district, to whom they told their story. The Alderman, all sympathy, performed the ceremony.

Reaching into his pocket, the bridegroom discovered to his consternation that his wallet and a wedding ring which he had purchased earlier in the morning were missing. Some one had picked his pocket while he was riding around on the cars. Mr. Erwin, however, came to the rescue of the embarrassed bridegroom, and all was well. The couple went to the Hotel St. George and are living there temporarily.

BURGLARS STOLE PERFUMERY

MINEOLA, L. I., April 7.—The drug store of Thomas H. Rushmore of this village was entered early this morning and about $300 worth of perfumery and fancy articles was taken.

Sheriff Gildersleeve learns that several persons saw a man and woman hanging about the store about midnight. The place was entered through the rear window, which was forced, and the front door was then opened. It is supposed that in this way the man let in his woman companion.

The woman is described as a tall brunette about 30 years old, wearing black clothes. The man was about the same age, wore dark clothes and a derby hat.

TEN IDEAS OF JESUS.

Classical, Conventional, and Novel Views of Christ's Appearance.

A company which started in Cleveland, Ohio, with a name that, like a wounded snake, drags its queer length along, to wit, the Exhibition of American Art Company, has hired the second floor, or Piano Nobile, of the building in West Forty-second Street formerly the home of the Harmonie Club, and is showing there ten oil paintings representing the conception of as many American painters of the appearance of Jesus Christ prior to the Crucifixion. Evidently the artists have been allowed to portray the Saviour in such wise as they chose, for while one considers Him as the man of sorrows, another depicts him as the friend of children, a third when resigning Himself to the coming death on the cross, a fourth as the preacher, &c.

Ten painters were asked to enter this contest, but as nothing has been heard from Prof. Carl Marr, who lives in Munich, an outsider and volunteer, Mr. William H. Crane, bids fair to see his picture accepted as a substitute.

Mr. John La Farge responds to the call with a figure that elicits all the pleasure that comes from marvelously beautiful colors and draperies nobly and simply composed. He paints Christ the Comforter, following the text: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." His Christ has long curls of brownish hair, a somewhat pointed beard, broad brow and eyes set far apart, a straight Greek nose, and an expression steadfast and aloof. One thinks of busts of Zeus marked by an Olympian calm. The right hand holds a long shepherd's crook, with butt on the ground; the left lies on the breast. A broad red-gold halo frames the head. An undergarment of old rose color is happily combined with a long cloak, or toga, of dark blue, which is light blue in places.

In strong contrast is the figure by Mr. Frederick S. Lamb, which symbolizes the Old and New Jerusalem. Christ, in brown outer and ivory white inner robe, stands on a rocky height above Jerusalem, which is seen in a plunging view extending over the valley beyond. The face is strongly moved, and there is appeal in the open palms of the hands by the sides. In the clouds back of the head are the towers of the New Jerusalem, and this celestial city is so managed, by carrying up the central part in a tower of many tiers and pinnacles, that a white cross is formed, against which the upper part of the figure makes a silhouette. Colors are not so vivid as, and the idea is more purely symbolical than, those of the figure by La Farge.

Mr. Joseph Lauber has taken a middle course. Against a fine landscape suggestive of Syrian wastes stands a figure to represent the text: "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." A scarf, or portion of a white outer robe, covers the head. The hair and beard are reddish, the hands are raised, with palms outward, and the face is well formed, but not of the conventional sort. It is virile, and has an earnest, perhaps one may say impassioned, expression. The draperies are full and very handsomely arranged; the color fine and rich. Mr. George Hitchock shows Christ as the Preacher, the right hand low with argumentative gesture, the left hand laid on the breast. True to his Holland surroundings, this painter furnishes as background an orchard, with the grass filled with brilliant growing flowers, the sunlight falling in large spots on tall verdure, and the colorful masses of flowers. There is a subtle maze of light and shade, out of which the somewhat peasantlike face of Christ disengages itself. He is clad in one ivory-white garment, confined at the waist by a broad blue girdle. Hair and beard are yellowish brown.

Still further removed from the ordinary types of Christ are the face and figure by Mr. Charles C. Curran, whose text is "Come unto Me." The single robe leaves the neck and right shoulder bare. Reddish hair and beard, a modern face with a touch of fanaticism in the expression, both hands about waist high and with palms outward, powerful physique. The simplicity of this figure and certain streaks of light rising from behind the head in the dark background, add to the impressiveness of the picture.

Mr. Kenyon Cox has taken the same text, "Come unto Me," but the treatment is very different. The hair and beard are darker red, the eyebrows straight and eyes deep in the sockets; the open hands, very long in the palms, are lowered. Mr. Gari Melchers has taken "The Man of Sorrows" as his view of Christ. He has given only a half-length, eyes down, woebegone mouth, left hand to breast, a thick golden aureole, dark hair and beard. color scheme is sweet, but avoids the cloying touch, and the flesh tints are soft and attractive.

Mr. F. V. Du Mond treats the same theme differently, and with more intention of making a rounded picture than the others. Under an arch of stones of two soft colors stands Christ, with covered head and face of a Syrian type facing outward. He raises both hands. A woman crouches at His feet and looks around in fear, seizing the The expression is strongly sorrowful and the color scheme rich and impressive.

Two of the contestants have introduced additional figures, following the reproving speech of Christ regarding the woman: "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." Mr. Will H. Low has a young Christ in profile, with light red hair, leaning over a young woman who kneels at his feet. The group is most graceful. The woman also has light reddish-yellow hair, which does not fail to harmonize with her pinkish robe. The end of His robe in her hand. Near her lie stones. To the left and slightly to the rear is another woman with distorted face, holding a whip. Opposite and to the rear a rabbi is seen in profile near a candelabrum full of burning lights, who consults the scrolls of the law. Although so balanced as to composition, it is at the same time the closest approach to a direct illustration of a chosen text of any of the exhibits.

"Thy Will Be Done," by Mr. William H. Crane, shows a pale, ascetic Christ, in profile under a tree. He has his hands and face up in prayer. This is the most conventional in composition and type. Perhaps for that very reason it may appeal particularly to the devout, who do not, for the most part, relish any representations of sacred persons which depart greatly from those they have been accustomed to from infancy.

These ten attempts to personify a character which cannot be realized in art are extremely interesting and worth seeing.

CATTLE EXCHANGE A TRUST.

Kansas Supreme Court Reverses—Millions in Mortgages Involved.

TOPEKA, Kan., April 7.—In a decision rendered here to-day the Kansas Supreme Court held that the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange is a trust and that all cattle mortgages made through members of that Exchange are invalid. Millions of dollars' worth of cattle paper doubtless will be affected.

The decision, which was unanimous, reverses a former decision of the Supreme Court in the same case, a rehearing having been granted. Nearly all the chattel mortgages issued through the members of the Exchange contain the provision that a commission of at least 50 cents a head shall be charged. Under the holding of the court this is sufficient to constitute a trust.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 7.—F. G. Robinson, President of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, said this afternoon that he did not think the decision of the Kansas Supreme Court, rendered to-day, would have a serious effect on existing contracts of the Exchange.

"The issue is not new," said Mr. Robinson. "It has been fought out by every Exchange in the country. It has been decided by all courts heretofore, including the Supreme Court of the United States, that we are not an illegal organization."

VESPER CREW GUILTY; SUSPENDED FOR A YEAR

TOO MUCH EXPENSE MONEY

Treasurer Censured for Lax Methods in Handling Money—Law Will Be Asked for Guidance of Crews in Future.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—After a session lasting eight and a half hours, until after midnight, the Executive Committee of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen dealt out severe punishment to the members of the Vesper Henley crew, and announced the following decision:

That Treasurer H. G. Ragatz be censured for his lax methods in handling the Henley fund. The charges against Harry B. Hoffman for malfeasance were not sustained, but he was censured for not surrounding himself with competent officials to handle the subscribed fund. Oscar L. Thorn, who was manager of the crew while abroad, was suspended for one year for injudicious expenditure of moneys intrusted to his care, and the following members of the crew were also suspended for one year by the committee:

James B. Juvenal, Roscoe C. Lockwood, Frank Schell, John O. Exley, H. H. Lott, L. C. Abell, Morris L. Williams, J. B. Flanagan, Joseph Dempsey, Daniel M. Gleason, T. R. Johnson, Charles E. Armstrong, and Robert C. Ayres.

After the men were sentenced President Pilkington behalf of the association, explained its attitude. He said there was no precedent to guide the committee, but in their judgment the oarsmen, according to the testimony, had each received a greater amount of money than was necessary to defray his legitimate expenses. The evidence had been weighed carefully by the committee, and in the presence of the oarsmen assembled, they were willing to put themselves on record as having treated the accused men in a fair and sportsmanlike manner.

In reply to questions which were hurled at him, Mr. Pilkington replied that the National body would be asked to enact a law at its coming annual meeting in Worcester, which would be a guidance in the future to traveling crews.

NAVAL MEN DEFIED COURT.

Judge Orders a Boy Released from Court-Martial Sentence.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., April 7.—Because he court-martialed Edward Upton Lisk, a Bayonne, N. J., boy in violation of the orders of Judge Waddill of the United States Court, Capt. Albert Dillingham, commander of the receiving ship Franklin, may himself be court-martialed.

Lisk's father sought to get the boy out of the navy. The lad is under age. The Government's attorney held that Lisk could be court-martialed for perjury in swearing falsely to the recruiting officer. The court dismissed the boy from the navy. Prior to this Judge Waddill issued orders that no court-martial should be held pending his decision, but Lisk was court-martialed and sentenced to a year in the naval prison in Boston.

Judge Waddill has issued a peremptory order to Capt. Dillingham commanding him to return Lisk to the custody of the Federal Court here so that the lad may be dismissed from the navy and a report has been made to the Navy Department.

MR. BELMONT ON COMPETITION.

The President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, in his letter to Chairman Burnett, makes perfectly sound objections to the Elsberg bill in its present shape. The most important error in the bill is the limitation of the terms of contracts which the Commission is allowed to make, twenty years, with one renewal in case of roads constructed, equipped, and operated by the same contractor, and ten years, with one renewal, for roads built and equipped by the city. It is plain that these terms are not adapted to secure competition; it is a fair inference that they are not intended to secure competition, and that the practical effect of the bill will be to reduce the city to a choice between city construction and operation or no subway extension. It has indeed been suggested that the existing corporations, under the conditions imposed by the bill and with the advantages of the combination upon which they have entered, can profit by the bill. Mr. Belmont's letter does not expressly say that this cannot take place, but it intimates as much, and it plainly points out that there can be no adequate competition by private capital for the leases prescribed.

Mr. Belmont also explicitly declares that "it is not to the interest of [his] company nor acceptable to its managers as citizens, that the city should be deprived of the advantages which it enjoys under the present law, and that it is better for all concerned that a situation should exist where the city will be able to enlist competition in the development of new subways." It would be putting a very low estimate on the civic virtue of the managers of the Interborough to infer that the prevention of competition would be "acceptable to them as citizens," but it is agreeable news that they regard the suppression or prevention of competition as opposed to their "interest." Neither the combination they have recently engaged in nor the administration of the service of the different lines they control would seem to indicate any effective demand on their part for competition. Nor do the facts in this direction betray the spirit which would make competition harmless to them. If it could be said that they have exhausted all reasonable means to give to the public a service so convenient, so prompt, so complete, and at such reasonable cost that rivalry need not be feared by them, their professed anxiety for competition would be more comprehensible and, not to put it too mildly, more credible. We welcome Mr. Belmont's criticism of the Elsberg bill as it stands. It is sound criticism. We hope that the Legislature will heed it. We should like to see the sentiment which is embodied in the letter to Chairman Burnett shown in the actual conduct of the company over which Mr. Belmont presides.

The common operation of the several lines included in the merger may very well have seemed a business necessity to the gentlemen who have brought it about. It will certainly give them an immense power and ought to carry with it a corresponding sense of responsibility. It has already excited intense hostility and suspicion, and it will continue to do so unless criticism is disarmed by the benefits conferred. It would be, for instance, a strong argument in favor of the merger, and it would be in practical agreement with the sentiment expressed by Mr. Belmont, if to the public were given transfers from all cross-town lines to any of the three systems of north and south travel, the Subway, the surface roads, and the elevated, and from each of those systems to either of the others. That, so far as cost and convenience of travel are concerned, would be about all that competition could force from the managers. It would in a substantial manner vindicate combination as against competition if the grant were made voluntarily.

FRANCIS JOSEPH'S TRIUMPH.

The latest achievement of the Austrian Emperor in averting disaster in his curiously complex dominions is, on the whole, considering the need of it and the way in which it has been brought about, the greatest. What in effect he has done is to compel respect for his semi-autocratic authority in the matter of the army by threatening the Magyars, the ruling class in Hungary though the minority of the population, with the grant of manhood suffrage. The situation was graver than any he had faced in the forty years he has been King of Hungary or the nearly sixty for which he has been the Emperor of Austria.

Of the 45,000,000 population of Austria and Hungary, some 12,000,000 are Germans and about 9,000,000 are Magyars. The Germans are, though a minority in Austria, the most influential element, as are the Magyars in Hungary. The immediate cause of the recent trouble was the claim of the Hungarians that their language should be used in the words of command addressed to the Hungarian troops in the imperial army. Back of this lay acute differences of interest in the commercial relations of the empire-kingdom as affected by recent treaties proposed or negotiated. In both Austria and Hungary the conditions of suffrage—property qualification and the right of persons in certain occupations to vote, together with the concentration of powers in the upper branches of the Parliaments—give to the Germans in Austria and to the Magyars in Hungary a decided advantage. It was the possible withdrawal in part of this advantage that induced the present "compromise." The solution is extremely satisfactory so far as the immediate future is concerned. But it is plain that an element has been introduced in the government of the two nations that may produce serious changes. The idea of manhood suffrage once lodged in the popular mind is not easily dismissed from it.

MR. MITCHELL'S EMBARRASSMENT.

Mr. Mitchell is said to have remarked that he liked the literary style of the gentleman who proposed arbitration for the dispute in the bituminous coal trade. The reason for Mr. Mitchell's appreciation is that the language used is substantially his own. Public opinion will look below the verbiage to the substance of the proposal, and will conclude that there is a parity of argument in support of arbitration in both the anthracite and bituminous trades. There are trade reasons specifically supporting the proposition, and there is not a little satisfaction in seeing Mr. Mitchell's medicine prescribed to himself.

All Mr. Mitchell's manoeuvres have been addressed toward uniting the two industries when it suited his plans. The time has now arrived for uniting the industries when it suits the plans of his opponents. And it will also serve the public interests to have the two trades united in this manner, even if in no other. The two products are competitive, and fair competition is the best regulator of prices yet devised. But there is also an unfair competition, when producers cut each other's throats and laborers as well are driven by their necessities to accept less than a living wage. The coal industry in particular has suffered from a competition which has lowered the standard of living and of citizenship in the coal regions. British miners have been supplanted by those from North Europe, and they in turn driven out by later comers from South Europe, and each change has been for the worse in all qualities which go to make good Americans. The United Mine Workers have done good work in resisting this deterioration in the quality of labor, and it detracts nothing from the result that the motive has been selfish. On the other hand, the operators in competing for public patronage have often driven prices below a fair average. It is hard to appreciate this at this season of fatness, but it is nevertheless true that feasts and famines have alternated in the coal trade, the companies now piling up enormous surpluses and premiums, and now being reorganized in bankruptcy or embarrassment. Some know how to profit by this, but generally speaking it is objectionable.

At the present time we have in the anthracite trade a strongly controlled if not absolutely monopolistic industry. We have general employment, good wages, and a full sale at prices rather high, but which were fixed by arbitration and in deference to the public demand that the companies should defer to the men's demands. In the bituminous trade we have a disorganized industry, with both miners and operators at swords' points. If competition is carried to its last result we will have cheap coal, indeed, but at the cost of sacrifice of profits and wages. And in the background there is danger that the excessive competition between the two products may upset both markets. The alternative is arbitration which shall promote stability in one trade as it has in the other, although the conditions prevent the full realization of such a scheme.

Undeniably Mr. Mitchell somewhat embarrassed the anthracite operators by his proposal of arbitration. Doubtless they are annoyed by the creation of a dilemma in which they must either reject arbitration or imperil the result of a previous arbitration. We judge the peril to be negligible. The Conciliation Board's mind is so nearly known that there is no substantial risk that questions of principle already settled will be disturbed. Mr. Mitchell practically surrendered when he accepted a forum which he knew would take a short cut to whatever new conditions exist to warrant a new adjustment. It is impossible to anticipate that he will get anything more than he ought to have, and that he ought to get. On the other hand, the same course will lead to the same result in the rival industry, and there is as much reason that they should be united in the arbitration as there is that Mr. Mitchell should unite them in the union. He cannot be criticised for taking that course in his judgment of his own interests, and he cannot be excused from taking the same dose when happily conditions warrant uniting the two trades in collective bargaining which shall make for the greatest good of the greatest number, alike of miners and operators, of producers and consumers.

ON CHOOSING WIVES.

Under the title of "The Choice of a Wife" The St. James's Gazette has opened a discussion which is always timely, and as apposite on one side of the Atlantic as on the other. Sometimes a single instance of it is of equally acute interest on both sides, as Lord Curzon has just reminded the Pilgrims' Club in London in saying that the best pilgrimage he ever made in his life was the one he made across the Atlantic to persuade an American pilgrim to continue her life pilgrimage in his company.

Our British contemporary admits that its title may be regarded as a misnomer, since in so many cases wives are not chosen, but "happen." In a great many more cases, one may pretty safely say, they choose, and the discussion might more properly proceed under the title of "The Choice of a Husband." Of course the male in this case is deeply unaware of its facts. He fancies himself the pursuer, when he is in fact the pursued, as Galatea in the eclogue did not flee until she was aware that her lover was looking after. But it is none the less true that she is, quite perhaps as often as not, the Valkyr, "the chooser of the slain," and the object of her choice the unresisting and willing victim. Not that this is at all necessarily to her discredit. There are, of course, women who take the warpath without serious intentions. Like the defiant Seminole, they battle for the joy they have to see the white man fall. But a young woman whose intentions are both serious and honorable has nothing at all to be ashamed of in endeavoring by all womanly means to acquire the man whom she believes she can make happy and knows that she means to try to.

Perhaps it is "Anglo-Saxon" or "English speaking," perhaps it is more general and "Teutonic." But in spite of the philosophers there is in this country, and we believe in England also, a general objection to the conduct of a man, at least of a young man, who marries for any other, or even any better, reason than that he is in love. How he came to be there he would by the nature of the case find it difficult or impossible to explain. If he could give satisfactory reasons all to whom those reasons appealed would be in love with the object of his affections, a result which would evidently lead to marriages of inconvenience or to no marriages at all. The marriage of reason is what is called on the Continent a mariage de convenance, of which the British writer rather atrociously says that it is an object of envy to those whose own marriages have combined romance with inconvenience.

If one is really bent on making a marriage of reason instead of waiting for a "call," excellent recipes may be given to him. A wise man once advised his son, who had shown some disposition to choose instead of waiting to be chosen, to "look for a good woman's daughter." It would be hard to find any better basis for a happy union. In general, of course, mixed marriages, whether the mixture be of religion or of country, would be viewed by a wise adviser with apprehension, although Lord Curzon's experience is only one of very many as to the possible happiness of marriages between persons of different nationalities, much more alike as are the nationalities of Lord and Lady Curzon than any other two nationalities. Dr. Johnson's famous saying that marriages would be happier if they were arranged by the Lord Chancellor, due regard being paid to the ages and conditions of the parties, has never been accepted as a working rule in his own country. There is the wholly "reasonable" and extremely circumspect Count Boni Castellane, whose marriage of reason has so lately been shown to be so far from a success. There are quite enough more failures of the same kind to offset the unhappy marriages of romance. It is of these, of course, that Burton declares that matches are made in heaven, though matches of the sulphurous kind, of which all of us know some instances, suggest a very different place of manufacture.

Swift's saying that the reason why so few marriages are happy is that "young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages," is doubly outrageous. In the first place it is an outrageous begging of the question. The testimony of less cynical observers in our day and country is that most marriages are entitled to be called happy. In the second place it outrageously puts the whole blame for unhappy marriages on the female partner, contrary alike to probability and to fact. But at least as many of the marriages are failures in which men "choose" their wives, or think they do, as in cases in which men become the prey of their own imaginations. And there is this to be said from the point of view of reason in favor of marriages with which reason has nothing to do. In the first months of married life there are necessarily very many differences to be adjusted and small incompatibilities of ways of thinking and feeling to be reconciled. That, as all experienced spouses know, is the trying period. Marriage is like life in that it is a school wherein whoso does not learn must suffer. Now, to diminish the friction of this trying time no better lubricant could possibly be provided than the romantic love, which cannot be expected to last forever, but which may very probably outlast this greatest necessity for it of the early connubial period. When the glamour of the romance "fades into the light of common day," and a real man and a real woman take the places of the creatures of each other's fancy, and passion cools into at best the tenderest of friendships, both parties are better off, and will acknowledge themselves to be better off because the romance has been. "In erring reason's spite" all mankind will continue to love a lover, and justly so.

TRANSFERS.

The notice put up in the street cars of Manhattan some weeks ago warning passengers that they must ask for their transfers when they paid their fares or fail to get them on the cars was both criticised and defended at the time it was posted. It was criticised on the ground that it showed a disposition on the part of the corporation to make an ignorant or forgetful passenger pay twice instead of once. It was defended on the ground that it promised to secure the collection of fares which otherwise might not be collected.

A subsequent order, not posted in the cars, denouncing pains and penalties against any conductor who should remind a passenger at the time of payment of a fare that he was entitled to a transfer, seemed to justify these critics. It was explained that this order was revoked soon after it was issued. Inquiry among conductors, however, elicits the information that this is not the case, but that the order is in force and that many conductors have suffered punishment on account of their well-meant efforts to prevent the consequences of the neglect of their passengers.

If this be the case, the behavior of the company is evidently shabby. A stronger term might be applied to it, and would be, if the issue were between individuals. Such behavior bears its natural fruit in determining the public, or too large a part of it, to take every advantage of a corporation which takes every advantage of its customers. A lively traffic in transfers is in daily operation. It is not at all uncommon to see a passenger who has dismounted from a car with an unused transfer pass it over to an acquaintance, or even to a stranger. Of course this practice is dishonest. The corporation would be quite justified in prosecuting it to the utmost in every case which came to its knowledge. But by the nature of the case detection happens only in an infinitesimal proportion of the cases of criminality. The persons who engage in this dishonest, and indeed thievish, practice of getting rides for two passengers on one fare may salve their consciences by insisting to themselves that he who seeks equity should do equity. Of course this is no excuse. But a corporation which seeks to get two fares where but one is due will get no sympathy in its complaint that there are those who try to get two rides for the price of one.

LEGISLATIVE FREE PASSES.

Article XIII., Section 4, of the State Constitution reads:

> No public officer or person elected or appointed to a public office under the laws of this State shall directly or indirectly ask, demand, accept, receive, or consent to receive for his own use or benefit, or for the use or benefit of another, any free pass, free transportation, franking privilege, or discrimination in passenger, telegraph, or telephone rates from any person or corporation, or make use of the same himself or in conjunction with another.

The violator of the section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall forfeit his office at the suit of the Attorney General. What puzzles us is how the Senate Committee on Railroads could have advanced to the third reading a bill which directly contravenes this provision of the fundamental law by entitling members of the Legislature and all other elective State officers to transportation over the railroads of this State "free of charge when in the discharge of their official duties."

With amazing meekness the Standard Oil Trust subsidiary corporations withdraw from sundry States which had excluded them from business within their borders. This is the result of Mr. Hadley's example to Mr. Moody, and Mr. Garfield, and even to President Roosevelt, of how to prosecute a trust by executing the law. It is extremely satisfactory, and yet we cannot but wonder whether oil will be cheapened. That was not the result in Kansas, where the trust received the worst mauling within its extensive experience. Of course the demonstration that the trust is not above the law is worth while in itself, yet it would be a wonderful appetizer for further prosecution if it could be made to appear that what was going on is not mere trust baiting, but has some practical value.

A POET'S LAY.

Now comes the robin, blue bird, jay,
In voice and plumage fine;
There is no bird without a lay,
Except these hens of mine.

And if their lay be long delayed
Methinks my lay will be
To write a merry roundelay
On chicken fricassee.

CLARICE W. RILEY.

SMALL TALK OF WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—Not long after William Alden Smith this afternoon had announced his candidacy for the Senatorship which Russell Alger will give up at the end of this Congress, an excited constituent of the Michigan Representative bulged into the room of the Ways and Means Committee and demanded to know if Mr. Smith was in. Arthur Blauvelt, the assistant clerk of the committee, looked up from his desk and replied:

"No. He is over at the Senate."

Sereno Payne of Auburn, the Chairman of the committee, who, according to popular tradition, has been in the House 100 years and had his eye on the Senate for ninety-nine of them, heard this response.

"Great Scott!" he ejaculated. "Has he got there so soon? Why, it wasn't an hour ago that he announced his candidacy."

When young Mr. Keliher of Massachusetts finished his few brief remarks on the subject of immigration in the House this afternoon it was just 4:30 o'clock, half an hour short of the usual time for adjournment. But Mr. Overstreet and Mr. Moon, who control the time on the Post Office Appropriation bill, agreed to suspend the talk then and call it a day. So Mr. Overstreet moved that the Committee of the Whole rise. Mr. Sherman, who was in the chair, put the question and it was carried, while one of the clerks pushed the button that rings the bell in the Speaker's room to notify him when he is needed in the House. Then everybody waited. But "Uncle Joe" did not come. A minute went by with no sign of the Speaker. The button was pushed again, vigorously, and two or three clerks dashed about looking for "Uncle Joe." At last he appeared, striding in from the lobby, with his hands full of important-looking papers, seemingly coming reluctantly from imperative business elsewhere. He stepped up to the desk and reached out for the gavel. Sherman turned it over with a grin.

"Sorry to have cut short your nap," he said. "We got through early."

Rucker of Missouri and Pou of North Carolina were voicing bitter complaints because the Committee on Election of President and Vice President had done nothing with any of the nine bills referred to it at this session on the subject of political contributions, especially by corporations. Not only has nothing been done, but no meetings of the committee are held.

"Isn't there any way the minority can get a meeting of the committee?" plaintively asked Judge Rucker.

"Haven't you a regular meeting day?" asked John Sharp Williams.

There is a story going the rounds of the Capitol which would seem to show that the pages of the Senate are not very well up in contemporary history. Senator Lodge and Senator McCreary are a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations to consider the message of the President on the claims of Cope Whitehouse to the Wadi Raiyan, Egypt, and Mr. Whitehouse had sent a card to the Senator from Kentucky.

Senator McCreary's private secretary was sitting in the Senate anteroom when a page came up and asked whether the Senator was in his room, and was answered in the negative. Presently a second page came up and asked whether the secretary knew where Senator McCreary could be found, and was told that he was somewhere close at hand. In less than a minute a third page appeared and asked in excited tones: "Can't you tell us where Senator McCreary is?"

Thereupon the secretary said: "Look here. What is all this about? What do you all want the Senator for in such a hurry?" To which the page replied:

"The President has sent up the Pope from the White House with a message for Mr. McCreary."

THE ADULT BLIND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"One Who Knows," in the letter printed in The Times on Sunday concerning the work of the New York State Association for Promoting the Interests of the Blind, strikes close to the truth, it seems to me, when he says that the blind do not need charity so much as an agency to find a chance for them to do the work they have been taught how to do. "One Who Knows" argues that the schools for the blind educate them to a point where they could take care of themselves, if only they were not then turned adrift to get their real start in the economic world as best they can, and thinks that if the new association will be a sort of employment association for such educated blind persons, the greatest part of the "problem" of the blind will be solved. I have been following the work of the association fairly closely ever since I first heard of it, a month or so ago, and I know it is doing that work. But it seems to me a far greater difficulty must be surmounted by it.

The great proportion of the blind lose their sight after they have become adults. They have to begin all over then without the advantages of training in schools for the blind. That is the real problem, as I see it—not only to find employment for those who are able to work, but to make workmen out of those who have to begin all over again under new and particularly trying circumstances, at an age when the schools for blind children are closed to them. And these, as statistics show, constitute by far the greater proportion of the blind population. I have been glad to find that the new association is trying to do that very work. I have visited the workshop for men on Forty-second Street, and I found it as much a training school in manual industries as a workshop. They have a blind teacher out every day giving instruction to blind women free. Not only could Andrew Carnegie do good by bestowing the "price of one library" on this association, as "One Who Knows" says, but any one else can contribute a smaller sum with a certainty that it is well spent, I am sure, and will bring full returns.

ONE WHO IS LEARNING.

New Haven's Dramatic Censor.

From The Boston Herald.

To the classic City of New Haven now belongs whatever glory attaches to the distinction of having formally established a censorship of her theatres, with the Chief of Police for chief censor, who is authorized by law to pass upon all theatrical performances in that city, and to order their discontinuance whenever he may see fit so to do. It looks like locating a rather delicate responsibility on an official whose acquaintance with dramatic art may fairly be assumed to be somewhat limited, assuming that he is of the ordinary Chief of Police calibre. This New Haven enforcement will be watched with interest, if not anxiety, by theatrical people everywhere. And it wouldn't be surprising if New Haven became the butt of many a flinty joke on the stage.

Optimism in New Orleans.

From The New Orleans States.

The night of storm can herald a morning of bright, glorious sunshine. How dare any creature separate their destiny of life and death from this love and wisdom of pity and faith of to-morrow. * * *

TRINITY'S ACTIVITIES.

Work Done Not to be Gauged by Attendance at One Service.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a right way and a wrong way of looking at things; there is a right way and a wrong way of criticising and of judging.

The right way is to give all the facts and all the figures; the wrong way is to give them in part.

"Quiller," your correspondent, has chosen the latter in writing of the work and attendance at Trinity's downtown chapels. As I am both connected and interested in the work at St. John's and St. Luke's Chapels, I think I know something of the actual facts and conditions relative to the work in which we are engaged, and write you, therefore, concerning it.

Our soil is not a kindly one, and it is not one that is easy to till, and yet it is as important as any in this great city. St. John's and St. Luke's Chapels are manned by four clergymen. On each Sunday there are three services and Sunday school at each of the chapels—not one service, as "Quiller" would have your readers believe. If each of the services averages 80 then that would make 240 in attendance at each of the chapels, or 480 at both of them, which number is often exceeded. Suppose "Quiller" should happen in at 6 A. M. or at 7:30 A. M. on Easter Day and find 150 or 175 at each of the services and should actually count 325 or 350 at the two early services, and 450 all told, including the 10:30 service, who made their communions on that day; and suppose it reached 500 through week-day and private communions before the week was up—500 out of 625 reported—does he think he could find another parish in this city, St. Bartholomew's, for instance, or St. Thomas's, or any of the Roman parishes, which got out a larger percentage of communions out of the number reported or enrolled? I think not.

It is almost impossible to give the exact number of bona fide communicants here at St. John's or St. Luke's, as removals are so frequent. Last year we had 94 confirmed; this year 75. Still our losses to other parishes have been as many as we have gathered in, and some years even more. Besides, on Friday evenings "Quiller" could count 200 or 250 at St. John's, and 175 at St. Luke's on Wednesday evenings. Now, the people with whom we have to do are most all hard-working people, residing in one, two, three, and four rooms. Some members of these families attend one service and some another on Sundays. Perhaps not one dozen can attend more than one service on any one Sunday, so our several services are not made up of the same people. "Quiller" does not know this, or does not care to know it.

Again, we have three boys' guilds averaging 75 or 80 in attendance; also three women's societies, averaging in attendance over 100; four girls' guilds, averaging 90 or 100, all of which meet once a week, with a religious service at each one. Some of the members, for one reason or another, can't get out at a Sunday service, and therefore attend or take advantage of the religious aspect of the guild. We have a men's club of 90 men. At St. Luke's there are similar organizations maintained.

Of course, it is the height of folly to compare our attendance at the late morning service with an uptown fashionable parish, as "Quiller" did. If rich people desire to go to church they can go. If our poor tenement-house people wish to go they must dovetail their work, and if the husband goes the wife must remain at home to mind the babies, and cook the meals, &c.

"Quiller" said, among other things, that Trinity was maintaining one clergyman for every fifteen persons in attendance, which, I think, this letter disproves, as the other downtown chapels are working on the same lines that we are. The four clergymen at St. John's and St. Luke's Chapels are busy men—too busy to bother very much about "Quiller," but, indeed they have no occasion to apologize for their industry or for the fruits thereof.

A Hansom in Cambridge.

From The Boston Transcript.

Great excitement in Cambridge! A hansom cab has been seen in Brattle Street, and every loyal Cantabrigian is up in arms, prepared to strike for his altars and his fires. For metropolitanization has thus come so near that the whites of its eyes can be clearly seen. Sacred institutions are menaced as never before. If hansoms can run wild in Cambridge, then what's to become of the ancient fire bell, the unpaved avenues, the quaint and classic custom of living in somebody's else back yard, and the dictum that not even the rich need be excluded from good society? The hansom has depraved London, spoiled New York, debauched Chicago, and even imperiled Boston. It stands for cockney vulgarity. It connotes the chimney-pot hat. It's the chariot of Bromides. It savors of Philistinism, town shoddiness, and general penury of soul.

But from all I learn, Cambridge has taken a rather exaggerated view of its dread visitant. Eyewitnesses report that said hansom had the air of a lost child and the puzzled, frightened demeanor of "green pigs far from home." Perhaps, after all, it was only bearing some misguided New Yorker upon a tour of suburban exploration and adventure. I know a New Yorker who proudly maintains a gas log in his country house, another who rides ten miles out of town every day to a flat, a third who thinks the trees in Union Square a foe to public health. Any one of them would prefer a hansom to any other vehicle, whether in Cambridge, the Yellowstone Park, the Scottish Highlands, or Fifth Avenue.

From Economista, Havana.

It is to India, and to the Arabs as middlemen, that Europe, and through Europe America, owe this now familiar fruit. The orange crossed from Africa to Spain with Mohammedanism, while, probably, the Crusaders are to be thanked for bringing it to Italy and Western Europe among their trophies of the East. The very name is really Arabic—"naranj"—and of Eastern origin, though the legend that it comes from two words meaning "elephant" and "be ill," because elephants ate oranges to make themselves ill, is absurd. Probably in French the initial "n" is dropped off from naranj with the final "n" of the indefinite article, just as our "an apron" represent "a napron," and the spelling with an "o" points to false association with "or" (gold.)

On Tipping the Hat.

From The Pittsburg Dispatch.

New Yorkers still cling to the ancient custom of tipping their hats when greeting a male friend or acquaintance. It is a common sight to see a staid, prosperous looking business man as he passes an acquaintance tipping his hat, although the other is alone, and unaccompanied by a woman. It is the same after a party has been together somewhere, at dinner probably, or at the theatre. You will notice that as one separates himself from the others he will say good-night, or au revoir, and then tip his hat. Also, when one man is introduced to another, it is dollars to a subway ticket that he will lift his chapeau. Wonder why it is? They don't do it in Pittsburg.

For His Wife.

From The Houston Post.

"Yassuh, is yo' got any washin' tuh do?"

"Why, you surely don't do washing?"

WEATHER BUREAU REPORTS.

Why the Publication of Barometer Readings Was Stopped.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have before me an editorial clipping from The Times of the 29th ult. The article is predicated on the assumption that this bureau veils its work in secrecy and withholds information from the press and from persons that are interested in meteorological problems. This as a mistake.

At the dinner of the Maritime Association I made the simple announcement that I believed we had, for the first time in the history of meteorological science, reached a definite basis on which the general character of the weather might be forecast for a considerable period in advance. This step has not been gained by neglecting short-range forecasts in the slightest, because our studies in that line have been carried on independently of our other work. The new principle will not be adopted for official use until after it has been thoroughly tested, and in due time a complete public exposition will be made of it. I made my announcement because I thought the public would be interested in knowing that science had at last gained a reasonably firm ground on which it might stand in taking up this important study, especially as astrologers and charlatans have for years been preying upon the credulity of the people and foisting upon them long-range predictions that are based upon no rational principle—that are nothing but the merest guesswork.

You are in error in assuming that any of the independent or long-range forecasters make any use of the daily barometric data, at least those whose predictions appear in print. Few of them even know how to read a barometer. Most of them are illiterate charlatans, like quack doctors. However, the barometric data have never been withheld from the public, for the most complete barometric information has been charted each morning for years on maps that are distributed from about one hundred different centres. This in the only form in which these data can be used to advantage by any one, even an expert.

Several years ago the printing of the detailed barometic readings was abandoned by this bureau, and also by nearly all of the newspapers, because of the gradual appreciation of the fact that such readings had little or no value to any one, and useful data about temperature and wind velocity were substituted. My order to withhold the few readings that were being published was for the purpose of completing the reform now so nearly effected. However, in order that the bureau might not be placed before the public in the light of withholding from the press anything that it desired to have from our records, the order was modified so that local offices might give to the press and to commercial organizations anything which in their judgment they could use.

That we do not veil anything in secrecy is shown by the fact that more than thirty of our local officials give public lectures each Winter on the work of the bureau and on the science of meteorology as it is applied by us.

Prison-Made Goods.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see that the Committee on Labor has reported a bill against convict labor goods. I beg to state that this bill will not give the desired relief, as the Government buys very little goods made by convict laborers. There should be a stamp tax equal to at least 25 per cent. ad valorem placed on all goods manufactured by prison laborers. This will equalize the cost of production with manufacturers who employ free labor, and prevent speculators who employ convicts from underselling the market.

There should also be a law requiring that all goods made in prison be stamped in large letters, "Prison made."

The speculators who employ prison labor do not pay any taxes, while the manufacturers and laborers employed in these industries contribute millions to the support of the State and National Governments.

The proper place to employ convicts is on the public highways, work that would not be done otherwise.

Ways to Befriend the Horse.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Could not the "Friend of Horses" and other such friends get some authority by joining and wearing the badge of the society for preventing cruelty?

The dreadful spectacle of a stalwart man with fiendish face lashing the quivering legs of a horse that could not back a load of coal haunts one. It suggested the idea of side openings to coal carts. Why not? It seemed an inspiration, an invention. An hour later just such a dreamed of wagon drove up to the sidewalk and discharged its load. Why not more of them? And what about those badges?

HELP.

The Best Cent's Worth.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I noticed Andrew Carnegie's recent letter stating his opinion of The New York Times, and the only thing that surprises me in the matter is that it has taken Mr. Carnegie so long to discover the fact that The Times is the "best cent's worth," or possibly he was too modest to express that opinion sooner. I recognized that fact quite some time ago, and I think the paper is better to-day than it was then.

A Dream!

From The Hartford Times.

Will there come a time when the whole American people will unite in support of some one man for the Presidency, no other candidate being proposed or thought of?

It may be so. We wish it might come about in 1908.

Should such a situation arise, the platform on which the American people will stand, all together—not a kicker among them—will naturally be very short and simple. Indeed, it may consist of less than half a line of the narrowest column of the smallest newspaper in the land. Here it is:

"Give us a rest."

THE STORK'S DECISION.

Since Roosevelt began to talk
About the duty of the Stork
There's not a bird in all the sky
More sadly overworked than I.

I've carried babies in my beak
Until it's really growing weak,
For every workingman I know
Has ordered seventeen, or so.

And this has also made me sore—
I've carried kittens by the score,
And pugs, to those who like such things,
Until I've nearly lost my wings.

But when I'm ordered by the Zoo
To bring an elephant or two,
And some one at the Broadway show
Desires a Hippo kid or so,

It's really crowding things too hard!
I'll have to get a Union Card;
And let them order what they like—
If it's too heavy I can strike.

And Teddy, what a sight 'twill be
To see him "arbitrating" me!
Hooray! I think at last a walk
On Easy Street confronts the Stork!

The Social Whirl justifies at least one part of its title. It spins along for the most part at a lively, pleasant pace, provides a large amount of genuine fun in the course of its two or more hours duration, and its plot—what there is of it—is not the abjectly, hopeless, inane and incompetent thing which most persons have come to associate with musical shows. There is, in fact, enough ingenuity in it to justify the use of the word fresh.

Think of that—something fresh in musical comedy. The thing seems impossible. But it's there—at the Casino.

Four men with names the initials of which are identical form the spokes in the wheel which revolves merriment in "The Social Whirl." The Whirl, be it known, is a paper which prints scandal, when it can get it, and occasionally suppresses it, for a proper consideration. The same idea in another sort of play might make satire—real social satire—American satire. Here it only serves to hold together the various elements of girls, songs, dance, and specialty. But it serves that purpose well.

As for the other ingredients, they are there in plentiful variety. A more comely lot of girls has never been gathered together in a show of its kind. They dash in and out, now striking the eye in a splash of vivid, blinding crimson ballet skirt, now swishing blue silks and satin alluringly in a song of bootblacks, with the younger girls polishing the slippers of their taller and more modish sisters. Again, in hunting coats and riding skirts, with a capitally painted outdoor set for a background, they satisfy the eye, while the ear is pleased with a ringing chorus, capitally written and sung.

Very amusing is a song of a lady who played upon the calliope and who sends out love greetings in its queer, deep tones, a song very well given by Joseph Coyne. Excellent are the specialties introduced by Miss Ritchie, Mr. Bond, and Mr. Ross, and funny beyond expression the song of Sam Simmons, a colored gentleman, who "just had to dance" whenever he heard a band. This last, sung by Maude Raymond, had a typical Casino crowd in an ecstasy of delight last night, as it is likely to do for some time to come.

On the whole, about as entertaining a show of its kind as Broadway has seen for many a long day, with Ada Lewis, Elizabeth Brice, Blanche Deyo, and Mabel Fenton, each in turn handing out a song, a dance, or a specialty to please the crowd.

Gustav Kerker's music is much above the average heard in these heterogeneous entertainments, and the book, by Charles Doty, and the lyrics, by Joseph Herbert, serve their purpose excellently.

FIVE HURT IN "TANNHAEUSER"

Part of Conried Opera Stage Setting Collapses in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 7.—A panic was created among the singers of the Conried Opera Company, and much excitement was caused in the audience at the Auditorium Theatre to-night, when part of a stage setting collapsed and five of the singers fell about twenty feet to the stage, one being injured painfully. The curtain was rung down hurriedly, and there was delay of ten minutes before the performance was continued. During the delay the audience crowded into the lobbies and hallways, discussing the accident.

"Tannhäuser" was being presented. Scene II. of the first act, had been reached. The scene depicted a valley. In the background was a castle, from which a long flight of stairs led to the stage floor. Members of the chorus, singing and marching by twos, were coming down the stairs, when one of the platforms which supports a section of the stairs gave way and fell. Two young women of the chorus had just crossed that section.

Bolore Mentini, a chorus man, who was following close behind, had not heard the platform fall, the sound being drowned by the singing. He fell from the stairs and plunged to the stage. Two men following behind him tried to grasp him and prevent his falling, but were unsuccessful. They leaped across the break and marched down on the stage, but the next four men got bad falls. Miss Belle Alten, who was singing, was interrupted by the groans of the injured men and ran from the stage. The curtain was rung down, and many, thinking the opera permanently put off, left the house.

EMILE SAURET HEARD AGAIN.

French Violinist Plays at Final Concert of Russian Symphony Society.

With the repetition this afternoon of the concert it gave at Carnegie Hall last night, the Russian Symphony Society closes its third and most successful season. From a modest beginning in Cooper Union the concerts of the society have grown to be a considerable factor in the musical life of New York, and announcement is made that its activities will be continued next year, with the concert night changed from Saturday to Thursday.

Last night's concert was signalized by the reappearance of Emile Sauret, the French violinist, who has not been heard here for several years. He was greeted with enthusiasm and listened to gratefully. He played Dvorak's melodious and interesting concerto, and played it in a manner that showed no diminution in his mastery of the violin or of the music which he was called upon to interpret.

The first number on the programme consisted of two excerpts, "The Savant" and "The Dreamer," from Arenski's suite "Silhouettes," played in memory of the composer, who died last month, and who was an honorary Vice President of the society. This was followed by Rubinstein's humorous character sketch of "Don Quixote," and by the third act's music of the opera ballet "Mlada," by Rimsky-Korsakeff, one of the most modern of modern attempts at tonal color painting. Like many of its kind, it is attractive and excites a curiosity which yearns for the full-stage picture in order to complete the effect.

AMBULANCE JUST IN TIME.

Surgeon Attending a Sick Man When Tenement Wall Fell In.

Vinzenzo Barbaro, an Italian with only one leg was found ill in his room on the top floor of the rear tenement at 67 Oliver Street yesterday afternoon, and an ambulance was called to take him to Hudson Street Hospital. While Dr. Merrill was helping the man from the house the front wall of the tenement began to crumble and pieces of brick fell into the courtyard, where a number of children were playing.

They started to run into the street, but before they had gone many steps a section of the wall tumbled out, bricks and mortar falling on the head of Lizzie Traumto. The ambulance surgeon ran to the assistance of the little girl, and after attending her injuries hurried to the hospital with both the man and the child.

In the meantime the wall of the old tenement was so dangerous that the police were notified. Some one turned in an alarm of fire, and when the firemen arrived they helped to hurry the tenants into the street.

METCALFE REPLIES TO KLAW.

Critic Defends the Bill Regulating Admission to Theatres.

James S. Metcalfe, dramatic critic of Life, talked yesterday to a TIMES reporter about the bill to regulate admission to theatres, which has now reached its third reading in both houses of the Legislature. Marc Klaw, the theatre manager, had said that it threw open the doors of the theatres to drunkards, lunatics, and persons with contagious diseases. Mr. Klaw maintained that the passage of the Metcalfe bill would also encourage the ticket speculators.

Mr. Metcalfe made this rejoinder to Mr. Klaw's statements:

"Mr. Klaw evidently takes his knowledge of the bill from the argument put up by the lawyer speaking for the Theatrical Trust before the Codes Committee of the Senate. The lawyer made the discovery that the passage of the bill would throw the theatres into bankruptcy because it would do away with the use of theatre tickets and any one could walk into any theatre without paying. Upon hearing this statement the members of the committee referred to the text of the bill and then laughed in a dignified, Senatorial way at this remarkable theory. The cause of merriment will appear by a perusal of the proposed law, which is as follows:

> All persons within the jurisdiction of this State shall be entitled to the full accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of licensed theatres and places of amusement, and a person who, as owner or lessee or manager or employe of a licensed theatre or place of amusement, excludes, without just cause or excuse, from said theatre or place of amusement any person is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"Mr. Klaw has evidently overlooked the clause 'without just cause or excuse.' That a man was drunk, or crazy, or had a contagious disease, would probably be deemed 'a just cause or excuse' for his exclusion from a theatre quite as much as the fact that he had not bought a ticket of admission.

"As to Mr. Klaw's claim that the passage of this bill would encourage the ticket speculators, it is a fact that this bill would not alter that situation at all. The matter is now, since the Court of Appeals decision in the case of Collister vs. Hayman, entirely under the control of the managers. If the speculators do business in front of the theatres, it is because the managers want them there, as the law upholds the theatre in refusing to admit a person who buys a ticket in such circumstances."

WILLIAM COLLIER ABSENT.

Actor Fails to Appear When His Wife's Suit Is Called.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., April 7.—The case of Mrs. Louise Allen Collier against her husband, William Collier, the actor, came before Justice Kelly in a Special Term of the Supreme Court here to-day. Collier defaulted, but the Justice said he would give him until next Thursday to prepare his case and put in an appearance. The hearing will next be taken up in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Collier testified regarding an agreement signed by her husband and herself when they separated in December last. This provides that the parties to it are to live apart. Collier, according to the agreement, is to pay his wife monthly a sum of $100 a week, and he agrees to give her a bill of sale of all personal property on his country place at St. James, L. I. Mrs. Collier testified that her husband had refused to sell the real estate and account for the rents received from it. She asks for the appointment of a receiver for the property.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES PLAN TO CONSOLIDATE

A Union of the Fourth Avenue and Rutgers Congregations.

THE FORMER TO GO UPTOWN

Church Would Have Services of Both Dr. Mackenzie and Dr. Buchanan—Mission Work Planned.

Plans are under way for the consolidation of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, whose building is at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, with the Rutgers Riverside Presbyterian Church, one of the oldest in the city, at Broadway and Seventy-third Street. The proposed union is based on the fact that comparatively few persons in this city attend church below Twenty-third Street, with the exception of Episcopalians and Catholics.

The pastor of the Rutgers Riverside Church is the Rev. Dr. Robert Mackenzie. The pastor of the Fourth Avenue Church is the Rev. Dr. Walter D. Buchanan. Some reference to the matter will probably be made by Dr. Buchanan at the service this morning, although he had not positively decided last evening that he would refer to it. One of the principal details of consolidation yet to be decided is the question of a name for the consolidated church. The Rutgers congregation desires to cling to its name because of its associations. The Fourth Avenue congregation woul prefer the name of Presbyterian Collegiate Church, or some other name indicating their union with the Rutgers Church.

The work, as now planned, will not be entirely confined to the work done in and from the Rutgers Church. The latter is on a good financial basis, and is prosperous in every way. It does not need the assistance of any other congregation. The property on which the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church now stands has recently grown very valuable. This is because of the numerous large business buildings which have gone up all around it, and its proximity to the Subway station at Twenty-third Street. The Trustees have already refused an offer of $750,000 for the property.

The plan is to add the money from the sale of the Fourth Avenue church's site to the treasury of the consolidated church, and use the interest of the united funds for the establishment of Presbyterian missions in the upper part of the city, and also to give financial support to small or struggling congregations. The consolidated church will have the services of both Dr. Mackenzie and Dr. Buchanan.

"Dr. Mackenzie and I understand each other in this plan," said Dr. Buchanan. "In its furtherance we have thought more of the church at large than our immediate congregations, dear as they are to us. We hope to do much for the development of the Presbyterian Church in this city."

"The matter has been discussed thoroughly by the Trustees. It is not generally known among the members of the congregations. You can, I think, understand our condition. Until a few years ago there were rows of dwellings near us. Now there are great granite blocks. More than that, we are very near to the Madison Avenue Church with which, as you will remember, there was some talk that we would consolidate some time ago.

"Many of the members of my congregation live up town now. There are really more of them living above Fifty-ninth Street than below it. I am 40 years old and as active as most men of my age, but it is rather difficult to cover so large a field as my flock is scattered over, and I haven't all the assistance that some up-town churches have.

"In this matter we have considered the development of the Church at large as well as our own field, and there seems to be no doubt that the Church at large would be benefited by the union. We could be of great assistance to our sister churches up town and to our people, who mostly live there."

"Yes, the matter has been mooted," said the Rev. Dr. Mackenzie. "I do not understand, however, that the plan has been decided upon. It is certain that I shall not speak of it from my pulpit to-morrow.

"Our church is a very old one, you know—one of the oldest in the city. It was incorporated in 1796. We are up here only since 1889. One of our first locations was in Rutgers Street downtown.

"The plan, as I understand it, is to form a kind of collegiate church. In our history we were once united with two other congregations."

The Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church was built in 1858. It became widely known through the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, who, because of his ability as a public speaker, his prominence in public affairs, and his earnest work in the temperance cause, attracted a large congregation.

FOX-MORGENTHAU WEDDING.

Ceremony at the Bride's Home, Followed by a Dance at Sherry's.

A pretty wedding of yesterday was that of Mortimer J. Fox to Miss Helen Morgenthau, daughter of Henry Morgenthau, former President of the Central Realty Bond and Trust Company. The ceremony was performed at 6 o'clock at Mr. Morgenthau's home, 30 West Seventy-second Street. Miss Alma Morgenthau, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids the Misses Alice Goldschmidt, Elsie Ehrich, Ruth Morgenthau, and Alice Siesel.

The bride wore a gown of white satin trimmed with point applique lace, with a Watteau train. The bridesmaids were in white embroidered mull, and pink was their color. It was an apple blossom wedding, these flowers, with other Spring blossoms, being used.

The best man was David Fox, and the ushers Oscar Siesel, R. E. Simon, D. Fox, Rudolph Niedlinger, Samuel Bijur, Edgar J. Moeller, and Henry Morgenthau, Jr. Following the wedding there was a dinner and dance at Sherry's. About 350 guests were present. The bridal couple will go to California on their wedding trip.

DIED AT WIFE'S BEDSIDE.

Emil F Neuman, 34 years old, a hotel man, dropped dead at the bedside of his wife at their home, 103 Bay Thirty-fourth Street, Bensonhurst, on Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Neuman had been confined to her room for several days, and was under constant medical attendance. Neuman was also present, and it is believed that the mental and nervous strain which he suffered affected his heart. He suddenly pitched forward, and when examined by the physician who was attending Mrs. Neuman was dead.

The couple had been married two years. Shortly after the death of Mr. Neuman a child was born to Mrs. Neuman. The mother has not yet been notified of the death of her husband. Neuman, with his brother, George F. Neuman, were the proprietors of the Nassau Café, at Surf and Stillwell Avenue, Coney Island.

BOILED EGG OF OLD ENGLAND.

May Take the Place of Roast Beef as a Result of the Boat Race.

Far more than a mere athletic triumph was Cambridge's victory yesterday. It was the demonstration of a great scientific principle that bids fair to subvert the gustatory traditions of a nation. Other crews have won on form, or fortune; it remained for the Light Blue crew of 1906 to owe their laurels to the common farm yard egg.

On eggs they were trained—raw eggs, poached eggs, eggs boiled soft and eggs as hard as rocks, scrambled eggs, fried eggs, eggs beaten up in milk, and eggs turned into omelets. Every resource of the culinary artist was called into request, and in the strength of those eggs they rowed Oxford to a standstill.

When first people heard that every Cantab polished off four eggs for breakfast they laughed; when they were told that five dozen eggs were consumed by the crew each day they sneered; but one or two sensational performances in practice made them sit up and take notice.

Then the historians of the turf declared that to eggs Birmingham owed in 1830 his victory in the St. Leger over Priam, the Derby winner, and the scientists came forward with uncanny calculations of how much albumen, proteids, and other things that people eat without knowing it an egg contains. The London restaurants began to feel the change. No one would take his breakfast, his luncheon, or his dinner without an egg, and egg flips, eggnog, and every other drink with an egg to its name became the rage.

The country was scoured in all directions for eggs. From Brittany, Denmark, and other countries came eggs in countless thousands. But still the demand is increasing, and with the victory of Cambridge it is confidently expected that "The Boiled Egg of Old England" is come to stay.

ABRAHAM KOHN, 103.

The relatives and friends of Abraham Kohn of 3 Mitchell Place began yesterday to make preparations to celebrate Mr. Kohn's one hundred and third birthday anniversary in July. They sent cards of invitation to various persons living in Europe so that the distant relatives of Mr. Kohn may have time to journey to New York in time to attend the celebration. When seen yesterday at his boarding house Mr. Kohn said that he firmly believed that he would live at least ten years more.

"I have boarded here in this house for more than thirty years," he said, "and I expect to remain here for at least ten years more. I come of a long-lived family. I was born in July, 1803, and on my next birthday will be 103 years old. My grandfather lived to be 107, and my father lived to be 105, and as I have taken better care of myself than either of them I don't see why I should not outlive the period they lived.

"I was born at Bamberg, in Bavaria, and came to the United States sixty-five years ago. My youngest child, or, as I call her, my baby, is Nancy, who is 43 years old. One of my boys, Samuel, is only 65 years old, while the other, Simon, is only a kid, being but 50. I have six great-grandchildren and twenty grandchildren.

"I think going to bed early nights helps a man. I'm usually in bed at 10 o'clock. Even before I retired from the dry goods business I went to bed at 10 o'clock nights. As to the use of intoxicants, I can say that beer never did me any harm, neither did my cigar-smoking."

SEA SNAKE AHOY!

And It Was a 20-Footer, Declares a Bay Pollution Inspector.

The sea serpent is abroad early this year, and right at the gates of the city. They call it a snake now, because it is not more than twenty feet long, but the larger species in the reptilian world grow rapidly, and the snake is likely to be a real srpent in a day or two.

Dr. George A. Soper of the New York Bay Pollution Commission tells about the serpent. One of his Inspectors told him about it on Friday. The Inspector said he saw it along the Brooklyn shore opposite Governors Island. The snake looked lonesome, but wouldn't abide the company of humans, and disappeared when the Inspector tried to inspect it.

Dr. Soper looked for the strange visitor yesterday, but failed to make its acquaintance. He thinks it escaped from some ship and was probably heading for the Aquarium.

PRINCETON ACTORS GIVE "TABASCO LAND"

Triangle Club's Musical Comedy Plays to Crowded Houses.

SONGS BRIGHT AND CATCHY

Large Audience Calls for Many Encores at Both the Afternoon and Evening Performances.

The Princeton Tiger smiled his broadest and purred his softest yesterday afternoon and evening in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, where the Triangle Club of Princeton gave its annual musical comedy before an audience that filled the improvised theatre at both performances.

The operetta this year is called "Tabasco Land." The book is by H. T. Fish, '06, and J. F. McPherson, '06; Russell C. Veit, '06; H. L. Dillon, '07, and K. S. Clark, '05, wrote the music and lyrics.

The piece is as sharp and piquant as its title. Of coure, everything happens in a rose colored comic opera land called "Tabasco," where people dress in colors and never have anything to do but kick up their heels and sing about their private affairs. To them comes a group of foreigners.

First of all, there is John James Jones-Smith from New York, with a silver mine to float. With him is Frances, his fair daughter. Then a French Count, an aeronaut, a German chemist, and an Irish chauffeur arrive, to say nothing of Reginald Taylorbilt, who has nothing but his English drawl; and Pearlene O'Brienne, nee Pearl O'Brien, who is a knowing minx. Kingsley Haddon, a young naval Lieutenant, and Obednego Hobbs, a sailor with a Marcel wave, complete the foreign contingent.

The Alcalde of the town, with many surnames, whom every one calls Mike for short, steals the plans of the mine. Jones-Smith shows the Tabascans how to form a stock exchange and sells 150,000 shares. When some one asks him to show his titles he feels in his pocket and finds—nothing.

Then Chimmie, the Chauffeur, lifts his eyes to heaven and exclaims, "Now I know it's a real stock exchange."

The sailor strolls by just then, looking for an ice cream parlor or something. The guilty Mayor pounces upon him and proclaims him the thief.

The flying machine Count, who helped the Mayor steal the plants, wants to marry lovely Carita, the Alcalde's light-footed daughter. The Mayor promises he shall. But Carita has other plans—which include the Lieutenant.

The two lovers, aided by Jones-Smith, Chimmie Dugan, Hobbs, and Perlene, plan to get back the plans. Perlene has worked in a séance factory. She has been an understudy for returning spooks, and she contrives to terrify the Alcalde almost to death. The papers are finally recovered. Whereupon Carita and her Lieutenant, Perlene and her Chimmie, join hands, and declare,

"O Uncle Sam, dear Uncle Sam,
Our hearts are true to you."

Songs, dances, and jokes all went with a dash. The music was bright and tuneful. The Triangle Orchestra, under the leadership of K. S. Clark, played with the right spirit, and the costumes were gay and elaborate.

The audience got a lot of fun out of the manly girls. Roy S. Durstine, '08, made a special hit as the sprightly Perlene. So did Granville G. Abernethy, '07, as the 250-pound duenna, Don Papita. Richard S. Barbee, '07, as Carita, did some dancing that was one of the features of the performance. Harry G. Treadwell, '09, as Chimmie, and Mr. Durstine, as Perlene, had a capital duet and dance, called "Shifty Sadie."

A special word should be said for the Pony Ballet. Eight stalwart blonde and brunette beauties in crimson accordion-plaited skirts and rose-embroidered bodices made as attractive and high kicking a chorus as ever tripped the boards.

The audience demanded innumerable encores, and got them all. Mr. Veit's lyrics, "The Toreador Song," "The Rose of Mexico," and "A Fair Senora," were warmly encored. Mr. Clark's "Yankee Dixie March" and "Mr. In-di-an," with the refrain,

"He must have been a handsome gent,
To get his picture on a cent,

were encored half a dozen times.

The performance ended with the singing of the Princeton College song, "Old Nassau," and two rousing "Sis—Boom—Ahs," one for New York and one for Princeton. The complete cast was as follows:

Don Miguel Hidalgo del Montezuma	Gibney O. Letcher
Pedro del Buro	J. Littell Martin
Comte Pierre Bombilleaux	John P. Myers
Hans Spruch	Arthur H. Osborn
Chimmie Dugan	Harry G. Treadwell

Carita	Richard S. Barbee

Pearlene O'Obrienne	Roy S. Durstine

Among the patronesses were Mrs. Archibald S. Alexander, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. John W. Alexander, Mrs. J. S. Auerbach, Mrs. William Baylis, Mrs. C. Ledyard Blair, Mrs. James L. Breese, Mrs. Alfred Ely, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mrs. Adrian H. Joline, Mrs. Gordon Macdonald, Mrs. George B. McClellan, Mrs. John J. McCook, Mrs. A. J. Moulton, Mrs. Benjamin Nicoll, Mrs. Dallas B. The Triangle Club is to give the piece later in Indianapolis, St. Louis, Louisville, Baltimore, Washington, and Philadelphia. The performances will be under the auspices of the Princeton Alumni Associations in the cities visited.

MR. CARNEGIE KISSES ALL SOUTHERN WOMEN

But Two Proxies in Atlanta Get the Actual Salutes.

UNDERSTOOD FOR THE REST

One of the Fair Representatives Had a Similar Experience with Hobson in 1899—Her Views on the Kiss.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 7.—Mrs. J. E. Eichberg, who was one of those who gained distinction by being kissed by Richmond Pearson Hobson, hero of the Merrimac, has won new fame through being kissed by Andrew Carnegie.

The event took place yesterday afternoon in the Carnegie Library here, where many of Atlanta's foremost residents had gathered at a reception in honor of the founder of the institution. Mr. Carnegie had made a speech, and many persons crowded around him to offer congratulations. Among the number were Mrs. Eichberg and a woman friend. When they had been presented to Mr. Carnegie by J. G. Phelps Stokes, Mrs. Eichberg praised Mr. Carnegie enthusiastically for his remarks on the South in general and Southern women in particular.

"As you are a type of that Southern woman of which I spoke," said Mr. Carnegie, "I'll kiss you for all the rest."

Before Mrs. Eichberg had fully grasped the idea, Mr. Carnegie had learned forward and gallantly saluted her, fair and square, as he had said he would.

Mrs. Eichberg blushed and smiled, while her companion stood beside her in open-eyed wonder. While she stood amazed, the alert Mr. Carnegie stepped briskly to her side and imprinted a salute on her lips also.

Great was the enthusiasm at this display of the library founder's gallantry, and not a few of Atlanta's society women were so carried away by their feelings that they pressed forward into perilous proximity to the New York visitor. But Mr. Carnegie seemed to have no intention of pursuing his experience. He resumed the more formal handshakings which had marked his previous greetings.

It was in 1899 that Mrs. Eichberg was kissed by Mr. Hobson. Her friends who recalled that incident endeavored to induce her to make comparisons, but Mrs. Eichberg declined.

"Well, Mrs. Eichberg," inquired the woman, "is the kiss of a millionaire all right?"

"I wouldn't take anything in the world for it," she replied, good-naturedly. "It was so unexpected, you know. When I congratulated him upon his speech, he just threw his arms around my neck and kissed me before I could think. Oh, he's a fine fellow."

ONCE FAMED SHOWMAN DEAD.

Silas Brooks Made a Fortune, but Died in a Poorhouse.

Special to The New York Times.

COLLINSVILLE, Conn., April 7.—Silas Brooks, musician, showman, and aeronaut, died to-day at the Burlington poorhouse, where he had lived for several years. Brooks first entered the show business in 1848, when P. T. Barnum's manager engaged him to carry out a scheme of the great showman in the shape of a Druid band. Brooks manufactured crude horn instruments and trained the band. They were grotesquely costumed, and proved one of Barnum's successful frauds. Barnum exhibited them until the Jenny Lind craze seized him. Then Brooks traveled with the troupe, and, making a small fortune, gradually drifted into the show business for himself.

A few years later he had a circus of 100 horses and 80 people. A feature of the show was a balloon ascension. Paulin, an aeronaut, of Philadelphia, was engaged. When the show was at Memphis Paulin was taken ill. The immense crowd demanded a fulfillment of the bill, and so Brooks donned the garb of the aeronaut and made his first balloon ascension. He continued making ascensions, and in all went up in a balloon 187 times.

He finally retired with a fortune, and married a bareback rider of his circus. A child was born which died. The woman later deserted her husband, and he plunged into dissipation.

GIANTS' FIRST VICTORY OF SEASON AT HOME

Score Ten Runs to Three for Yale Team.

GAME IS POORLY PLAYED

Four Thousand Persons at Polo Grounds, but Little Enthusiasm is Manifested.

In their opening game of the season at the Polo Grounds yesterday the world's champions did not show any wonderful progress over their exhibitions of last year, but in the Yale team as antagonists they were not called upon to exert themselves as if a championship game hinged on the result. One thing was plainly evident, however, and that was the splendid physical condition of the New Yorks. Every man showed the good effects of the nearly six weeks' training in the South, and as Manager McGraw said after the game: "Condition is everything, and as for playing, they will toe the mark in the proper form when the time arrives."

Probably 4,000 persons saw the game yesterday, but there was little enthusiasm manifested in the play, because it appeared to be a foregone conclusion that the champions would win. They achieved this result by a score of 10 to 3, but it was principally due to the wretched fielding of the collegians. There was not much difference in the play of the teams, either in the field or at the bat, but the mistakes of Yale were in excess of those of the New Yorks, and in almost every instance were damaging. Poor throwing was the chief weakness of the champions, although Donlin dropped an easy fly ball and his slowness in fielding a ball gave a Yale runner an extra base.

McGinnity and Taylor were used in the box for the New Yorks, and the excellent pitching of the "Iron Man" kept Yale down to four hits. Taylor was not so effective, the collegians hitting him freely in the eighth inning. Yale used three pitchers, but the greatest damage the team sustained was while Pratt was in the box, a triple, two doubles, and a single being made from his delivery. In fielding the Yale men alternated between good and bad. Hullskamp carried off the honors, his throw from right field to the plate, putting out George Browne, who attempted to score from second, being one of the best bits of fielding during the game. O'Brien also distinguished himself by a jumping catch of Bresnahan's fast drive in the fifth inning.

After retiring Yale without scoring in the first inning, the champions collected three unearned runs, due to dropped fly balls by Mallory and O'Brien, a wild throw by Jackson, and two bases on balls. The play of the collegians then improved until the fifth inning, when a base on balls, two doubles, and a bad throw by Chapin gave the champions three additional runs. Taylor's first appearance at the bat, in the sixth inning, resulted in his retirement, but Donlin drove the ball to deep centre field for three bases. Browne hit for a base, and on a double steal Donlin reached the plate and Browne got to second. A fumble by O'Brien and a single scored both Browne and McGann. The Giants added another run in the eighth on two fumbles by O'Brien and McGann's double.

Yale's first run was made in the seventh inning, and it was due to Dahlen's wild throw to first base. With one out in the ninth, O'Brien hit safely, and Donlin's error allowed him to reach second. Kinney followed with a double, and O'Brien scored. After Smith's fly ball had been dropped by Donlin, Madden, who had taken Mallory's place at right field, hit safely, and Kinney crossed the plate. AMERICANS' LIVELY FINISH.

Hit Atlanta Pitcher Freely in Ninth Inning and Win by 5 to 1.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 7.—Five runs in the ninth inning, made by a perfect hurricane of hits, gave the Greater New Yorks to-day's game over Atlanta, the locals being able to secure only one run. Up to the last inning it looked as if yesterday's performance was to be repeated. Neither side scored until the seventh inning, when, with Clarkson pitching, Atlanta earned one run. Winters, who was first at the bat, hit safely to centre field. Jordan got his base on balls, forcing Winters to second. Fox struck out. Sid Smith went out from second to first, Winters going from second to third, and Jordan from first to second. Stinson, batting for Harley, hit to left, scoring Winters, but Jordan was thrown out at the plate.

Kleinow, the first batsman for the New Yorks in the ninth inning, was put out. Eddie Hahn, batting for Clarkson, reached first on four bad balls. Dougherty reached first on Noblett's error, Hahn going to second. Keeler singled, and Kahn scored. Elberfeld got his base on balls. Moriarity was caught out on a fly at right, Dougherty scoring on the throw in. Williams hit to centre for three bases, scoring Keeler and Elberfeld. Conroy hit safely past short, and Williams ran home. Chase retired the side. The score:

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 7.—Princeton won her second baseball game of the season here to-day by defeating Fordham University of New York by the score of 7 to 1. The game was well played throughout, but the visitors were unable to hit either Heyniger or Byram. Fordham's only run was scored by Egan from third base after Hartman's hit had been caught in left field. Heyniger, a freshman, proved himself a valuable addition to the Tigers' pitching staff, allowing but two scattered hits. Score by innings:

NURSERY FOR CURRICULUM.

August Belmont's Two-Year-Old Wins Feature Race at Benning.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—In both racing and attendance, this was the banner day, thus far, of the Washington Jockey Club's Spring meeting at Benning. The weather was nearly ideal, the track was fast, and the card offered was excellent. Four favorites were returned as winners, the beaten favorites being Workman, in the first, and Weirdsome in the last race.

The feature of the card was the second running of the Washington Nursery Stakes, for two-year-olds, at four and a half furlongs, over the old course. Of the seven starters, the Belmont entries, Okenite and Curriculum, coupled, were made favorites at 1 to 3. Curriculum and Lady Vera were first to show, going easily neck and neck. The former gradually drew ahead and at the turn was a length and a half in the lead. Okenite was pocketed and could not get out. Lady Vera made a stirring run in the stretch, but Curriculum never was in danger, and finished an easy winner.

The Spring Handicap Steeplechase, at two and a half miles, brought out a field of good jumpers, and resulted in the breaking of the track record for the distance by four seconds, the time being 5:01. At post time, Douro and Phantom were even favorites at 8 to 5. Yama Christy fell at the first jump and rolled over the jockey, Holman, who sustained a dislocated shoulder. Douro and Copper made the running, each taking the jumps easily. On the flat Douro came away and won handily.

"Father Bill" Daly landed the final event of the day with Caronal, which was as good as 20 to 1. Caronal got away badly, but won rather handily after running entirely around his field. Summary:

FIRST RACE.—Selling, four-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Jack McKeon, 96 pounds, (Drolette,) 8 to 1 and even, won; Nattie Bumppo, 92, (Bryant,) 20 to 1 and 10 to 1, second; Paul Clifford, 94, (Keyes,) 12 to 1, third. Time—1:30. Morris,) 1 to 3 and out, won; Lady Vera, 110, (Miller,) 9 to 1 and 2 to 1, second; Campaigner, 113, (Knapp,) 10 to 1, third. Time—0:57 2-5. Manila, Okenite, Mammy Moo, and Allerion also ran.

THIRD RACE.—Maiden three-year-olds and upward; seven furlongs, Columbia course. Kuro, 102 pounds, (Miller,) 6 to 5 and 3 to 5, won; Frills, 92, (L. TRIALS FOR THE CARTER.

Horses in Season's First Big Handicap Made Good Moves.

Gallops by Carter Handicap horses made the only interesting feature of the routine of training on the Long Island tracks yesterday, few horses of note aside from those that are being prepared for the first important race of the New York season being out for work. Of the Carter entries that galloped, the first in the eyes of the watchers was the present favorite for the race, Roseben, which was sent a mile in handsome style at the Gravesend course. Roseben still is big and high in flesh, but his progress in the past week has been such that there is no room for doubt that he will be ready on Monday, April 16. The record-holding sprinter covered a mile in 1:46, in hand at all stages of the move, and did not tire when finishing, as he did in his shorter gallop of a few days before.

The fact that Frank Farrell has engaged Jockey Lucien Lyne to ride for his stable this Spring has about settled the question of a rider for Roseben, as the horse is trained in the Farrell establishment by Frank Weir, and Lyne, as the Farrell jockey, will have the mount.

Whimsical, three furlongs in 0:38; Belmere, six furlongs in 1:17, and Green Room, a half mile in 0:50, were other Carter Handicap entries that were out for work at Gravesend. At the same course Trainer Thomas Welsh had out the better known horses of his stable, and sent Ormondale a breezing trial of three furlongs in 0:30¾. Inquisitor and Merry Lark a half mile in the same notch, 0:49¾, and Duenna a half mile in 0:51.

Trainer Fred Burlew worked several sets, in which Edna Jackson, three-quarters of a mile in 1:16 and First Water a half mile in 0:52, were the most conspicuous animals. Both the Gravesend and the Sheepshead Bay training track, which were in first-class order, were well filled throughout the early hours of the day, but routine gallops by moderate class horses occupied the greater part of the time.

BETS ON BIG HANDICAPS.

The Picket and Agile Backed in the Future Books.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 7.—The Picket is the horse that will have to be beaten in the Brooklyn Handicap, horsemen from Louisville seem to agree. Every other trainer or owner with horses at the Churchill Downs track says he is going to have a bet on the horse that won the Brooklyn in 1904 if he goes along well after reaching the East, where he is to be shipped April 12. He will go to Aqueduct, and will be ready to race before the end of that meeting. All reports agree that The Picket is galloping quite soundly. B. J. Weller, who has made Cincinnati headquarters for his future book, says he has received many wagers on this horse, and the Brooklyn is a month and a half away.

From Lexington good reports are received of Agile, which already is considered by the Blue Grass turfmen as likely to run a winning race in the Suburban, for which he has been backed lightly by a few venturesome bettors. Agile and the others in Trainer Robert Tucker's charge would be leaving at once for the East were it not that King Henry was struck by a runaway two-year-old at the Lexington track Wednesday. This maiden three-year-old, by Sir Dixon, is well thought of, and is rated highly by Lexington turfmen. His injury is not serious, and as he is not entered for the Brooklyn he will have plenty of time to round to before the Suburban is run. Tucker probably will ship soon.

Bookmaker Weller says that considering his prices were announced only a week ago he has received a good amount of business for his future book, the end of the week bringing some substantial wagers from California on Dr. Leggo, which also has been backed from Chicago. Sysonby, Weller says, is being backed from all parts of the country, which he anticipated when he made the horse favorite, at 6 to 1.

New Orleans, as might be expected, is furnishing genuine support for Ram's Horn and Phil Finch, with a few wagers from there on the Tennessee Derby favorite, Security.

Lord of the Vale, Tokalon, and Proper have been backed with scattering bets on other horses. Except for the raising of prices against a few outsiders, the odds offered here are unchanged.

Many of Sysonby's admirers seem to think he will be good for two of the three big Spring handicaps, for Weller declares he already has had innumerable inquiries as to what price he will lay against Keene's grand horse winning two of the handicaps. He declines to do business that way.

COLUMBIA, 14; N. Y. U., 5.

New York University's nine proved an easy task for the Columbia players yesterday, going down before the Morningside team by the score of 14 to 5, in Columbia's second game of the season at South Field. Bradke's pitching was the only good feature of the game. With good support behind him the local collegians should have won by several more runs. The New York University team, while holding Columbia at times by snappy fielding, fell down at critical moments. Score by innings:

JAY GOULD, CHAMPION COURT TENNIS PLAYER

WON THREE STRAIGHT SETS

Brilliant Throng of Spectators Witnessed Pretty Exhibition at Racquet and Tennis Club.

Jay Gould, the seventeen-year-old son of George J. Gould is the champion court tennis player of the United States. He won the title yesterday at the New York Racquet and Tennis Club when he defeated Charles E. Sands, the former champion, in three straight sets, 6—2, 6—3, 6—4. It was the prettiest court tennis ever witnessed in this country. Young Gould played a remarkably steady game. He was effective rather than brilliant, and is really the first homebred champion. Spalding De Garmendia, who was educated in Spain, and learned the Spanish game of pelota in that country, was the first player to adopt the strictly American style. He was champion in 1894 and 1895, and for more than ten years was both racquet and court tennis champion of the New York Racquet and Tennis Club.

De Garmendia's early training was accomplished abroad, while young Jay Gould learned all he knows about the game in this country. He has fully borne out Peter Latham's prediction that he would soon be the National champion. In his first game, with Cairns of Boston, he used the railroad service, which is favored in England, but in his contests with ex-champions Joshua Crane, Jr., and Charles E. Sands he used the drop service, which is almost exclusively American. Sands played largely the British style, being quick in rallies and drives for openings. In the latter he was badly out of form, as there were only nine winning openings in the match, of which Gould secured half. Fast floor work, which is the real court tennis game, was responsible for the result of the contest. Gould was strong in the chases and placing, securing many points in this way. He was as steady as a rock and kept his opponent on the move throughout the contest, and proved that he is the strongest and most scientific court tennis player in America.

Never before has the New York Racquet and Tennis Club been so well patronized. Long before the hour set for the match every available space was occupied, and a number of members were unable to witness the game. George J. Gould, the new champion's father, watched his son's triumph in company with Harry Payne Whitney and E. La Montagne, while among those present were L. E. Larocque, O. S. Campbell, T. Suffern Tailer, Payne Whitney, T. Condé Nast, E. S. Knapp, Alonzo Potter, E. W. Jewell, R. L. Beeckman, George R. Fearing, A. Z. Gray, John D. Crimmins, G. P. Snow, J. H. Smith, C. H. Minn, H. O. Havemeyer, Jr., Ford Huntingdon, L. Clark, W. P. Burden, F. C. Cunningham, H. W. Slocum, H. P. Huntingdon, L. A. Carter, L. C. Clark, Jr., I. Townsend Burden, H. K. Vingut, Milton S. Barger, A. Morton, I. D. Irvin, R. H. Russell, J. Joseph Harriman, S. S. Furman, H. P. Homans, M. Terry, Jr., J. W. Hemming, E. Livingston, Clarence H. Mackay, E. A. Thomson, S. Day, G. F. Vingut, S. Townsend, H. W. Bull, G. Perkins, G. H. Clark, Robert J. Collier, H. C. Mortimer, Jr., M. La Montagne, H. La Montagne, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., G. Underhill, F. C. Havemeyer, J. Stanton, D. C. Clark, J. H. Proctor, Lawrence Waterbury, A. Gray, E. M. Dick, E. Larocque, Joshua H. Crane, Jr., and F. L. Dick.

One month ago Gould defeated Sands somewhat easily for the Tuxedo Gold Racquets, but since that time Sands has materially improved his game, and when the pair entered the court Gould was a 10 to 7 favorite. Gould opened the first set by capturing the initial game. The second was carried to deuce and vantage, and went to the champion on placing. Gould made the third a love game, and won the two following easily, making the score 4 to 1. Sands picked up and took the sixth game by a close margin, but Gould, by superb, steady tennis, captured the next two games and the set. Score, 6—2.

Gould's easy victory in the first set made him a 3 to 1 favorite when play began in the second. Gould secured the first game with ease, but was pushed hard in the second, deuce and vantage being called twice before Gould found the dedans. The young player made the grille opening in the third game, and soon won out, but missed two easy shots in the fourth game, which went to Sands. Gould won the fifth game through Sands going out of court. The sixth game also went to Gould by love, the latter again making the grille opening on a difficult back-court shot. Sands, who had been giving a poor exhibition, began to improve from this point. Both players were guilty of double faults in the seventh game, Sands winning on a clever place. He found the grille opening in the eighth game and won out. Gould blanked his opponent in the ninth and last game and won on service and placing. Score, 6—3.

The third set opened better for Sands, who secured the first two games from his young opponent. Gould's placing was too much for Sands in the third game, and the champion failed to score. The fourth game went to Sands through Gould going out of court. Gould made a chase better than two and won the fifth game, which was deuce and vantage. Sands made the game 4 to 2 in his favor, but a long and well-sustained rally in the seventh game seemed to tire him, and Gould succeeded in capturing the next four games in succession, winning the set, match, and championship. Summary:

LADIES' DAY AT N. Y. A. C.

Contests in the Club's Swimming Pool Entertain Members' Friends.

Wives and sweethearts of members of the New York Athletic Club invaded the town house of the "Mercury Foot" organization yesterday to see for themselves the attractions which prove so irrestible to the masculine portion of humanity. It was the fifty-seventh ladies' day of the club, and the big house, at Sixth Avenue and Central Park South, was a bower of palms and foliage, reflecting in the daintily colored gowns of the visitors the touch of Spring. It was a brilliant assemblage, and it made itself at home from the big swimming pool down stairs right up to the gymnasium, where a special musical programme was provided, and on up to the restaurant, which some apparently thought the best of all.

The hour of aquatic sports in the pool provided exciting events in plenty. C. A. Ruberi, the United States champion, exhibited the back stroke to perfection; E. E. Wenck, Jr., the porpoise stroke; T. E. Kitching, Jr., member of the United States champion relay team, the famous crawl stroke, while Gus Sundstrom, the swimming director, performed feats of smoking a pipe and cigar under water and other tricks as mystifying and amusing. There were also races. One in which members' sons contested for 50 yards was won by W. Kelly, 9 seconds handicap; F. Curchols, 10 seconds, second, and J. Curchols, 9 seconds, third. The time was 0:47 3-5, and the boys made a spirited contest out of the event.

There were also tilting matches; a pursuit race, in which L. J. Goodwin overhauled R. W. Camp inside of 85 seconds; tandem swimming, fancy diving, and a water polo match. This contest caused the women visitors to hang over the balconies with excitement watching the expert swimmers as they manoeuvered around the pool. The score proved a tie, Hesser scoring a goal for his team and Handley for his side.

An Indian magician provided startling features of the musicale, and while he was showing his mysteries, the big gymnasium was crowded. In this part of the building a fully equipped stage was erected, and on it a special performance was held in the evening in the way of a club smoker for the club members and their men friends. For the nonce the café athletes were displaced, for their training grounds on the second floor had been changed to a promenade, with lanes of palms leading from it into the billiard and recreation rooms. Here an orchestra played, troubadours sang, and light refreshments were served throughout the afternoon. Altogther it was a delightful afternoon of athletic experiences for the visitors.

CRESCENTS WIN AT LACROSSE

Opening Game of the Season with Stevens an Easy Victory.

The opening game of the lacrosse season at the Crescent Athletic Club grounds yesterday afternoon attracted a fair sized attendance to the Bay Ridge field to see the Stevens Institute team defeated by the Half Moon twelve by a score of 12 to 1. The game was fairly well contested during the first half, though not especially well played. Wall made the only score for Crescents on a well directed shot from a pass from Kennedy after eighteen minutes' play.

In the second half, however, the Crescent team ran away from Stevens, who appeared to tire badly and to fall off decidedly in their team play. Davis shot one goal after Wall had scored in two minutes, but both the other occasions, when they pressed the Crescent goal, Allan succeeded in stopping and deflecting their tries. Kennedy scored the third Crescent goal in eight minutes, and Shirreff and Kennedy added the last two. The game ended with Crescent pressing hard for a sixth score, which the Stevens defense managed to avert as time was called. The two teams lined up as follows:

Allan	Goal	Sterken
Doyle	Point	Hamilton
Drakeley	Cover point	Pinckney

PLANS FOR NEW 60-FOOTERS.

To Launch Effort This Month—Herreshoff Boat Data.

The big new bronze 60-footer Effort, building at City Island for F. M. Smith, will be launched about April 28, according to present plans. She has been inspected by several yachting experts during the past week, and has been highly praised. There is no question that both her owner and designer are enthusiastic over her chances, and longing eyes are being turned toward the King's Cup in spite of the presence of a formidable array of big schooners, yawls, and sloops promised for that race. The latest visitor at Jacob's yard was Capt. Lem Miller, who saw the Effort, and pronounced her a formidable antagonist.

The lines of the new boat are fine and designed for the greatest speed that can be gotten out of her length without the sacrifice of either stability or of comfort. Her displacement is good, her length of water line extreme in her class, and her sail spread as planned promises power. Capt. Howell, who will handle her, is confident that she will show a clean pair of heels to her competitors, and both F. M. Smith and Henry J. Gielow are anxious to put her in the lists whenever the opportunity of a race presents itself.

It will take ten days to bend her sails, so that she will be ready for delivery by May 15, and can be raced May 30, though she will likely make her debut against the new Clark boat at the Atlantic Yacht Club on June 12. These two boats are expected to be the main contenders in the class, and to them will attach the principal interest of the season as far as sloop racing goes, though both Weetamoe and Neola will be out for the New York Yacht Club regatta on June 14, and probably for the succeeding events.

The measurements of the new Herreshoff boat and some of her characteristics have been stated by E. Walter Clark, her owner. She will be 65 feet on the water line, with 18 feet beam and 9 feet draught. She will carry 5,000 square feet of sail, though it is uncertain whether this is actual or under the rule. She will be weighted with thirty-seven tons of lead ballast, according to one statement, though this figure has been questioned. Mr. Clark says she will be a full-bodied cruiser with a good turn of speed and able to take care of herself in any weather. She will rate above the limit of the fifty-seven-foot class, expecting to be trimmed down to that mark unless her plans undergo a change since the adoption of the racing code.

She will be raced at the Atlantic Yacht Club, at the New York and Larchmont regattas in June, will accompany the joint Atlantic-Philadelphia Corinthian cruise, will appear at Larchmont during race week, and participate in the New York Yacht Club cruise.

Lacrosse Tie at Columbia Oval.

Columbia's lacrosse team tied the New York Lacrosse Club by the score of 2 to 2, at Columbia Oval, Williamsbridge, yesterday afternoon. Evans tallied the first point for Columbia at the end of the first half. In the second half Hickok and E. Donohue each scored a goal and put Columbia in the rear. Haynes, however, by a clever shot, tied the score and saved his team from defeat. Summary:

AUTOISTS FAVOR TESTS OF PRACTICAL NATURE

OPEN-AIR SHOW ACTIVITY

Twelve Events for Empire City Track—Long Islanders Will Repeat Their Economy Run.

With the Automobile Club of America discussing plans for other tests than the two-gallon efficiency run that has already been announced, with economy runs to be held later in the season by the Long Island Automobile Club and the New York Motor Club, and the large number of mechanical and other tests provided for the open-air automobile carnival at Empire City track in May, it is easy to see what the competitive characteristic of the coming season will be. Track races, as such, in the vicinity of New York are absolutely eliminated, a fact that is in marked contrast to the conditions of a year ago, when three automobile tracks had arranged more events for the season than, perhaps, have ever been held throughout the United States in a year. The track racing interest collapsed early, and, with a very few exceptions, there will be no track racing to speak of this year.

Tests that may lead to practical information, and perhaps to improvements in mechanical construction, are the things that are generally demanded by motor car owners this season, and the extent of the interest in this respect is well seen when clubs of the standing of the Automobile Club of America, the Long Island and the New York Motor Clubs are giving the subject serious attention.

The Long Islanders have not decided whether their economy run will be held over the same course as last year, from Brooklyn to Southampton and back, or not. The committee will meet in a few days to determine the route and conditions. Besides this test, a number of short endurance runs have been provided by the Long Island Club, and the first will be held to-day, going to Garden City.

The Directors of the New York Motor Club are busy preparing conditions and planning the most serviceable routes for the club's second economy run. It will probably be of one week's duration, as formerly, and as an event of this sort entails a great deal of work and should produce valuable results, it will probably have the official sanction of the American Automobile Association.

The Governors of the New York Automobile Trade Association are working energetically for their open-air carnival and exhibition at the Empire City track on May 24, 25, and 26. Twelve practical contests have been decided upon, and the committee has a number of others under consideration. When the entire programme is completed, it will probably embody over twenty tests. Those already arranged are: Gasoline test with one pint of gasoline, brake test, vibration test, tug-of-war, hill-climbing test, relay race, reverse-gear test, slow race on high-speed gear, guessing contest on speed of cars, obstacle race, chauffeurs' contest for putting on and taking off tires, and electric mileage race.

Final arrangements were completed last week for the lease of the track, and the recent action of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers in placing branch houses on the same basis as agents, in so far as the privilege of entering unsanctioned shows is concerned, has given a decided impetus to the prospective success of the open-air show. Several entries of reliable and standard cars have been made. Besides the automobile tests on the track, a number of other novel features are being arranged which will make the show interesting as well as novel to all classes of spectators.

The American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, which is composed of about twenty-four leading makers, indorsed dealers' shows some time ago, and the more lenient policy now adopted by the National organization will react to the benefit of the public as well as to the makers of cars.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Among the entries received yesterday for the Atlantic City automobile races on April 25, 26, and 27, was the Grout steamer, which will be driven by Harry Maynes. This is the car which covered a half mile on the Coney Island Boulevard last Sunday morning in 0:20½, and when properly tuned up is expected to travel a mile on the smooth beach in better than 0:40. It will race against the gasoline cars in the free-for-all championship for the Atlantic City Cup.

An effort that augurs well for the next exhibition in Madison Square Garden is being displayed by the Show Committee of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers. The affairs of the National Show, held in January, hardly had been disposed of when the question of the next one was taken up. The committee for 1906-7, consisting of Col. George Pope, Marcus I. Brock and C. R. Mabley, held its organization meeting a few days ago and agreed upon certain fundamentals for the show of next year.

Asa Goddard, one of the Directors of the American Automobile Association, has lately been appointed Secretary of the Cleveland Automobile Club, and he began work there last week in the interests of Ohio good roads. The newly organized Ohio State Association is preparing an active canvass in the good roads movement, and plans are being made to erect proper sign boards on the leading highways.

Deliveries of 1906 Frayer-Miller cars began last week, when two carloads arrived by express. Among those who received cars were Major John R. Hegeman, Jr., Ordinance Officer of the First Brigade; Dr. William E. Butler of Brooklyn, H. W. Johns, and Benjamin S. Peck. The first deliveries of six-cylinder cars will be made next week.

Automobilists are watching with much attention the bill before Congress providing for free denaturized alcohol. The necessity of promptly providing a substitute for gasoline for fuel for internal combustion engines, especially for motor cars and farm machinery, is becoming more apparent every day.

Of all the self-propelled vehicles used in Indianapolis during 1905, 10 per cent. were owned by physicians who used them exclusively for business purposes, which emphasizes the fact that the motor car is firmly establishing itself in business as well as social circles.

The fact that the Lozier Motor Company is able to make prompt delivery on its cars is a big advantage and has increased sales. Among the purchasers last week were Frederick M. Hoyt, Vice Commodore of the Larchmont Yacht Club; Samuel A. Esswein, J. R. Williston, William Beard, Addison H. Hough of Cleveland, and R. H. Halliday.

E. V. Hartford, President of the Hartford Suspension Company, the importers of Gobron-Brillie cars, received word yesterday that the car which the French company has built for the Grand Prix in France will have a six-cylinder motor with a bore of 165 millimeters and a stroke of 220 millimeters. There will be two pistons in each cylinder, or twelve in all, and this should develop about 200 horse power—125 miles an hour on an ordinary macadam road.

The two-cylinder Columbia gasoline car is said to be the only one of its type having a governor on the engine. The reasons for this equipment are strongly supported by the makers of the car, who claim that in the absence of the governor the sudden release of the load by throwing out the clutch when the engine is turning at a good rate of speed is dangerous and sometimes destructive.

A radical departure in tire construction is being shown by the B. & P. Traction Tread Tire Co. This tire has a protecting flange tread equal to the full diameter of the tire. John D. Prince, the resident Manager of the company, is endeavoring to make arrangements with the Automobile Club of America to have it include a comprehensive tire test in the plans for spring contests.

The Governors of the Motor Boat Club of America have elected the following new members: Charles G. Gates, Walton Ferguson, Jr., Edward J. Schroeder, Tyler Morse, Henry Harrison Hungerford, Dr. J. Ralph Jacoby, Henry Carr Pearson, Frank K. Gilbreath, Clarence A. Godshalk, Dr. Egbert LeFevre, Louis Lee Haggin, Lawrence Abraham, Frederick Komp, Dr. J. George Sauer, Leon S. Mandel, William J. Duane, F. A. Phillips, Andrew J. McIntosh, Carl H. Dabelstein, Louis W. Riehl, and Fred Happel.

The six-day non-stop run of the Wayne car will be started at one minute after midnight to-morrow morning, starting from Times Square. Manager A. L. Kull will drive during the greater part of the trip. A full complement of passengers will be carried. The route selected for the run is from Times Square to 110th Street.

To Launch New 30's This Week.

The first of the new racing fleet of yachts for the coming season will take the water this week when the two thirty-footers building at Milton's Point for the Atlantic Yacht Club will be sent overboard. The boats have been finished for some time, except for the stepping of their masts, but there has been no rush to get them out into the weather, as they are not expected to be delivered until May 1. The spars are now en route from Shelter Island for all of the seven racing boats building for Gielow interests, and will be ready for stepping by Tuesday or Wednesday in all probability. No day has been definitely set for the two taking their maiden plunges, but it is likely to be next Saturday.

Morse of the Boston Yacht Club, who has assumed charge of the arrangements for the Easter Yacht Club's long-distance race for schooners on June 30, dissolved all doubts as to the big ninety-footers deserting Larchmont and New York in the early July dates, yesterday. In reply to an inquiry he wired: "Corona, Elmira, and Invader have entered race, New London to Marblehead." "Two others of the new schooners building this year have also entered the lists. Mr. Morse's own new boat, the Dervish, the yacht building at City Island from designs by Clinton H. Crane, and the new Taorima, building for ex-Commodore William S. Eaton, owner of the Agatha.

HUNTSMEN ESCAPE LUCKILY.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y., April 7.—Miss Caroline Bryce, the daughter of Gen. Lloyd S. Bryce, carried off the honors at the Meadow Brook Hunt to-day by leading the field from start to finish, daringly taking fence, ditch, and hedge without a halt.

Harry S. Page is preparing his string of steeplechasers for the racing season by working them at the hunts. He rode Zenus to-day as far as the check, and then mounted Pure Pepper and hunted him to the finish. Both horses are entered in several of the Spring steeplechase events. Pure Pepper stumbled over the first jump and unseated Mr. Page, but neither were injured. The meet was at Westbury, and from there the trail led to Guinea Woods, where there was a check. The finish was at Harbor Hill, Roslyn, on the Clarence Mackay estate. Just before the finish W. Scott Cameron took a cropper, horse and rider going down together. The spectators were surprised when Mr. Cameron got up uninjured, as the horse had rolled completely over him.

CAMBRIDGE IS VICTOR IN ENGLISH BOAT RACE

"CANTABS" LED ALL THE WAY

LONDAN, April 7.—The sixty-third annual boat race between crews representing the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge was rowed to-day over the usual course, from Putney to Mortlake on the Thames, a distance of four miles and 440 yards, and was won by Cambridge by three and a half lengths after an exciting race. The time, 19:24, was the best made since 1876, with three exceptions. The time in 1893, when Oxford won, was 18:47. Oxford in 1892 finished in 19:21 and in 1898 in 19:11.

Cambridge took the lead from the start and was never in the slightest danger of being overhauled. The Oxford men struggled gamely to the end, but the work was so punishing that several of them collapsed at the finish.

Seldom had the weather been so perfect for the great English boat race. The day was bright and sunny, the wind was very light, the water was smooth, and there was very little choice in the stations. Enormous crowds thronged all parts of the course.

Oxford won the toss and chose the Surrey side. The two boats got away nicely at 12:03 P. M. Cambridge struck the water first, pulling thirty-eight strokes during the first minute to Oxford's thirty-seven. The nose of the Cambridge boat quickly showed in front, and at the half-mile post Cambridge was half a length to the good. The leaders were rowing in lively style and with perfect finish to their strokes. They increased their lead to a full length before Craven Steps, about three-quarters of a mile from the start, was reached. Thereafter Cambridge drew away with every stroke. At Hammersmith Bridge, one and three-quarters of a mile from the start, Cambridge already had the race well in hand, with a lead of over two lengths. The Oxford boat at that stage of the race was rolling badly. Shortly afterward the Oxford men spurted a little and took their rivals' water, but from that time on it was merely a procession, though the Oxford oarsmen stuck to their work in a most persevering manner. Cambridge shot Barnes Bridge, a little over three and a half miles from the start, about five lengths in front of the Oxford boat, some of whose oarsmen were showing evident signs of distress. Cambridge could have won practically by any distance they liked, but their stroke slowed down on nearing the finish and Cambridge passed the winning post the easiest sort of winners.

The names and weights of the crews were as follows: Oxford—Bow, G. M. Graham, 153; 2, C. H. Illingworth, 169; 3, J. Dewar, 173½; 4, L. E. Jones, 199; 5, A. G. Kirby, 192½; 6, E. P. Evans, 190½; 7, A. C. Gladstone, 148½; stroke, H. C. Bucknall, 158; coxswain, L. P. Stedall, 117.

Cambridge—Bow, G. D. Cochrane, 148½; 2, J. H. F. Benham, 161; 3, H. M. Goldsmith, 175; 4, M. Donaldson, 190½; 5, B. C. Johnstone, 175; 6, B. V. Powell, 174½; 7, E. W. Powell, 160¾; stroke, D. C. R. Stuart, 155; coxswain, A. G. L. Hunt, 113.

This was the sixty-third contest between crews of the two great English universities. Since 1853 the races have been held annually. Between 1829, the year of the first aquatic contest between these universities, and 1905 Oxford won thirty-four and Cambridge twenty-seven times, the race in 1877 resulting in a dead heat. Last year Oxford won by three lengths, rowing the course from Putney to Mortlake in 20:35. At the outset this season Oxford was regarded as having the better chance of winning, her oarsmen being superior in weight and physique to those of Cambridge. Later, however, several members of the Oxford crew were incapacitated, and in the betting yesterday Cambridge was the favorite.

Year.	Time.	Year.	Time.

CADETS LEAD GEORGETOWN.

First and Second Annapolis Crews Beat Washington Eights.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 7.—The opening rowing regatta of the season between the first and second crews of the Naval Academy and Georgetown University here this afternoon was won by the navy in both classes, a repetition of the performances of the two previous seasons. All four of the crews entered the one race, which was over a two-mile course, and the Annapolis first crew was never headed. The winning time was 10:50⅗, made by the first navy crew. The first Georgetown crew was second in 11:05, the second navy crew was about a length behind, the time being 11:09¼, and the Georgetown second crew brought up the rear in 11:20.

Although the navy crew contains only two of last year's victorious eight, and most of the men in the second boat have not rowed before, Coach Dempsey of Georgetown said after the race that he considered the first navy crew stronger than that of last season, which won all of its four races. There was considerable wind blowing across the course this afternoon, but the watermanship of all the crews was good.

NO SCORE IN RUGBY.

New York and Yale Teams Play Without Issue at New Haven.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 7.—Yale played the New York English rugby team this afternoon at Yale Field, neither team scoring. It was the first game of rugby ever played at the university. The Englishmen were in good form, but the Yale team, that had had only two days' practice, used so many of the American game tactics in rushing the ball, interfering, massing weight, and hard tackling, that the light English methods received no chance. Yale had no knowledge of the game, but nearly scored a try when Morse and Roome ran the ball to the Englishmen's fifteen-yard line, when it was lost through a long run by Ortewill. Yale excelled in long-distance kicking, but the Englishmen gained more ground by kicking out of bounds. In the first half a true kick for goal by Ortewill from field was blocked by Andrews, and the game ended with the honors even in distance gained. The game was well received by the large Yale attendance. The line-up:

Yale, 0.	Position.	New York, 0.
Linn	Three-quarter back	Harvey
Holloway	Forward	Shelley
Stuart	Forward	Scott
O. M. Reid	Forward	Grooves
Andrews	Forward	Finch
Bower	Forward	Johnston
Congden	Forward	Craigie
Biebe	Forward	Hazel
Flinn	Forward	Glasgow
Wylie	Half back	R. Roberts
Hazen	Half back	Andrews
Stevenson	Three-quarter back	Robertson
Morse	Three-quarter back	Bell
Roome	Three-quarter back	E. Roberts
Veeder	Full back	Ortewill

Another Change in Columbia's Crew.

Another shake-up in the Columbia 'Varsity crew was made by Coach Goodwin yesterday afternoon. Cheadle, who was rowing at No. 8, was put in the second boat, and the men below him moved up a seat. This change brings O'Loughlin back to his former seat at No. 7. O'Loughlin is old 'Varsity timber, being one of the three men left at Columbia of last year's crew. Goodwin has shifted him, however, and put a new man, G. Mackenzie, in at stroke.

INTERNATIONAL TENNIS TEAM.

The American Committee Selects Wright, Ward, Collins, and Little.

America's International Lawn Tennis team will be composed of Beals C. Wright, Holcombe Ward, Kreigh Collins, and Raymond D. Little. This is the quartet who will endeavor to regain the Dwight F. Davis International Challenge Cup and return it to this country. This was the decision yesterday of the committee in charge of the challenging team, Frederick G. Anderson, Chairman, of the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club, Brooklyn; Dr. James Dwight, President of the National Association, Boston, and A. L. Hoskins, President of the Belmont Cricket Club of Philadelphia. Upon the announcement, followers of the sport in this city regarded the selection as the strongest and best-balanced group of players that could possibly have been selected, believing that their chances of success are excellent.

There was consternation, however, over the fact that the English Lawn Tennis Association had arbitrarily moved the dates of holding the competitions for the cup forward a month. The Americans will also be compelled to journey about the country, as only the finals will be played in London. According to the schedule as cabled by Secretary Mewburn, the American team will meet the players of France on June 1 at Liverpool. In the event of winning they will then go to Newport, Monmouth, where they will meet the winners of the Australasian-Austrian preliminary matches on June 7, 8, and 9.

This will be the hardest competition for the Americans, and upon the result will hang the privilege of their challenging the Britains for their holding of the cup. The finals have been scheduled for the courts of the All-England Club at Wimbledon, London, June 15, 16, and 18.

The selection of the American team was carefully worked out. Both Wright and Ward were on last year's team. They hold the American doubles championship, while Wright, the Bostonian, is the holder of the singles title. In the playing of the internationals a year ago, Wright, unfortunately, was overlooked, and, as he afterward demonstrated, he was easily the top man of the string in the singles. He again stands in the leading position this year. Any one of the other three players may easily take the place beside Wright in the singles. Ward always offers a problem which the most expert is put to the very limit to cope with. Collins, the Western champion, of Chicago, and Little, the vetrean Princetonian, are also at the top of their game.

So far as pairing for the doubles is concerned, the showing that Collins has made in the National championships at Newport indicates that he is not surpassed by any doubles player in the country. He could take his place beside Wright in the pair event, and equal, if not show greater strength, than Ward in this place.

A change will be made in sending the team abroad, as no manager will be taken with them in the capacity that Paul Dashiel filled a year ago. A player will be elected or appointed to the Captaincy, probably either Wright or Ward, but this remains to be settled. No arrangement will be made as to how the men will play in the matches, as was also done a year ago, as the selection will be made of the men showing the best form at the time the competitions have to be played.

The Western champion, Collins, will come East immediately, and practice will begin on the grass court of the Belmont Cricket Club, Philadelphia, April 15. From that time to May 18, when the team will sail from this city, the players will practice upon courts in New York and adjacent to it, where a grass surface is to be obtained.

WRESTLERS IN FINAL BOUTS.

Amateurs Have a Lively Finish for the Metropolitan Championships.

Amateur wrestlers met in the finals of the metropolitan championship tournament last night at the Boys' Club, Tenth Street and Avenue A. The bouts were fast, and in a number of them the wrestlers and even the referee went tumbling out of the ring upon the heads of the spectators. Three of the entries of the National Turn Verein of Newark, N. J., captured titles in their respective classes. Gus Bauers was the first of the trio to win a title, as he renewed his holding of the featherweight championship by defeating William Nelson of St. George's Athletic Club in a lively bout.

Then George Mehnert demonstrated the cleverness which had previously won for him the world's Olympic championship at St. Louis. He went at Frank Jaskocy of the Boys' Club as a terrier does to a rat. Mehnert was all activity and motion, and he successfully retained his holding of the special weight class, 125 pounds, by pinning his opponent to the mat in 1 minute and 9 seconds. H. Spanger only scored his victory in the lightweight class, 135 pounds, by aggressive all-round work against B. Bradshaw, The Boys' Club, who, while not so strong as Spanger, was able to break all of his holds and save himself from a fall.

115-Pound Class, Second Round.—August Swenson, Harlem Branch Y. M. C. A., defeated Louis Schindler, Clark House, by bar hold and rolling wing fall. Time—2:22. C., by half Nelson. Time—1:52 3-5.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Banks Report a Deficit in Surplus Reserve Account.

Prices Decline Moderately, but Selling Movement Is of Brief Duration —Stronger Closing.

In Saturday's bank statement Wall Street's worst fears were realized. The loss of cash, specie, and legal tenders together, amounting to $7,904,200, was somewhat less than had been indicated by the known movements of money, but in so far as this was better than had been looked for it was more than offset by an increase of $7,205,500 in loans. So large an expansion in loans was unexpected. One of the features of the call money market during the week had been the conspicuous absence of bank funds, and it was hoped that the bank statement would show a shifting of the strain from the banks to other hands. It seemed reasonable to suppose that the extension of foreign credit attracted by the higher rates for money would in some measure relieve the banks. The effect of an increase in loans, corresponding almost exactly to the loss of cash, was to cause the cash loss to be reflected entirely in reserves. Thus a surplus reserve at the end of the preceding week of $5,000,000 was turned into a deficit of $2,500,000.

The stock market's reception of the bank statement was in keeping with the indifference throughout the week to the high rates for call money. During the first hour of trading prices moved listlessly up and down within very narrow limits. On the publication of the Clearing House returns prices ran off sharply for a few minutes, but stocks were not pressed for sale in large quantities, and the reactionary movement not only halted, but in the last fifteen minutes positive strength developed in a number of issues, notably Pennsylvania. In the list of net price changes for the day declines predominated, but except in Union Pacific, which closed at a loss of 1½ per cent., the changes were generally expressed in fractions.

As in December of last year, when the bull campaign was kept going in the face of money rates that were prohibitive of general speculation, the element now bulling the market expects money conditions to right themselves in some happy-go-lucky manner. The old-fashioned idea of such things was that a deficit in the surplus reserves of the banks called emphatically for stock market liquidation, as the readiest and surest means of reducing loans, but here is a situation in which the large holders of stocks are too obstinate and too confident to sell. It is remembered that similar exigencies a few months ago entailed no disastrous stock market liquidation. In December the bull crowd was confident that there was a period of easy money just ahead, and it is equally confident at the present time that before the end of the month there will be money enough to go around. It is the opinion, in fact, of some very eminent banking authorities that the turn in money market conditions is not far away, if, indeed, the worst has not already been seen.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—India's cotton crop for the season 1905-6 is announced by Consul Fee of Bombay to be 3,240,000 bales of 400 pounds each. This is half a million bales less than in the previous year, although there were 505,000 additional acres planted. The increased yield in the province of Bombay was more than offset by the decrease in the central provinces, in Punjab and Hyderabad.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

First Deficit at This Season Since 1883 —Banks Lose $7,904,200 in Cash.

The banks reported yesterday a deficit of $2,560,625, the largest deficit reported since November, 1899. This deficit was brought about by a loss in cash amounting to $7,904,200, which was reduced to the amount of the decrease in reserves by a falling off of $849,200 in net deposits. The loan item showed a very heavy increase, amounting to almost as much as the loss in cash. This expansion in loans totaled $7,205,500.

This increase in the loan account bears upon the statements of international bankers that the New York banks have recently been called upon to take over a large amount of loans which had been carried abroad, but which, when they fell due recently, were not renewed.

A deficit in the reserves of the banks at this season of the year is very unusual. All recent deficits have occurred later in the year, and in order to find a deficit at this season it is necessary to go back more than twenty years. The last time that a deficit was reported in the first week in April was in 1883.

A week ago the banks held a surplus of $5,131,275, and at this time last year the surplus amounted to $8,682,525.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of April 8, 1905, follow:

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Prices of Stocks Firm, but Volume of Business Very Small.

Dullness Chiefly Due to the Monetary Situation — It Is Expected That London Will Indirectly Have to Provide a Large Sum for the Russian, German, and French Loans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, April 7.—The tone of the stock markets has been good this week and prices have been firm, but the volume of business has been very small.

The dullness is due chiefly to an international monetary situation that forbids large dealings on the Stock Exchange. Three Continental countries, Russia, Germany, and France, are making arrangements for large loans, and it is expected that London will be called upon to provide indirectly a large sum for taking up these loans in addition to any direct subscriptions that may be made here.

Germany has already begun selling stocks in this market, and no doubt France will follow suit. Money is cheaper here than it was, but there seems to be no more of it available for ordinary operations in the stock markets than a month ago.

There has been a good week for consols and other gilt-edged stocks. Consols have been marked at 91 several times since the week began, and that is the highest figure this year. The budget surplus already realized, which will be applied to debt redemption, has helped consols, and they have also strengthened on the belief that further sums are to be devoted to the same purpose in the coming financial year.

A moderate degree of activity has prevailed in the foreign Government section in consequence of the settlement of the Moroccan trouble, but there have been no startling movements.

British rails have been firmly held, but have not been dealt in heavily.

American rails as a rule closed considerably better than last week.

Mines have about held their own.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, April 7.—Rates for money were easy in the market to-day, though, in view of the release of dividends, the supplies were less abundant than anticipated. Discounts were firmer on the keenness of the foreign demand for gold and the weakness of the Continental exchanges.

Trading on the Stock Exchange generally was stagnant, owing to it being on the eve of the settlement, the approach of the Easter holidays, and the fact that many operators were away at the Oxford-Cambridge boat race. Consols receded.

Americans opened firm, improved to above parity, became inactive, and closed fairly firm.

Foreigners were idle, Continental operators being engaged in preparations for the Russian and German loans. Russian imperial 4s were in demand. Japanese were dull.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101¼.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £11,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 15.30; Lisbon, 4.

The cotton market closed yesterday with a little better feeling and more interest from outside, due to extremely bullish week-end statistics. Liverpool spot prices advanced 4 points, to 6.14d. on sales of 8,000 bales, and futures were up 3 to 5 points. There was some foreign and commission house buying in the New York market, the bull leaders were credited with considerable support both here and in Liverpool and shorts covered. The market scored a net gain of 12 to 13 points, closing at the top. May opened at 11.20, reacted to 11.18 and closed at 11.21. July opened at 11.14, lost a point, advanced to 11.16 and closed at 11.15. October opened at 10.53, sold up to 10.58 and closed at 10.57. December started at 10.54 and finished at 10.60.

The week has favored scalping operations throughout, there having been no pronounced changes in prices, the range being confined to 29 points, in May from 10.95 to 11.24, July from 10.92 to 11.18, and October 10.32 to 10.70.

The Liverpool future market closed very steady. May and June, 5.97; July and August, 5.98; August and September, 5.94; October and November, 5.78; December and January, 5.72. Spots were 6.14 for middling, against 4.27 last year. The local spot market advanced 10 points, to 11.70 for middling, against 8.05 last year. Sales were 400 bales, the tone being quoted quiet.

Port receipts, 11,319 bales, against 24,257 last week and 21,248 last year. Since Sept. 1, 6,817,082 bales, against 8,642,821 last year. Exports, 2,550 bales. Since Sept. 1, 5,215,102 bales, against 6,515,852 last year.

Cotton Opinions.

DICK BROTHERS & CO.—We feel justified in predicting higher prices for the general list within the next few days.

A. O. BROWN & CO.—The firmness of the market, despite ephemeral changes, seems clear. The feature which stands out most clearly as a dominating force is the demand for the actual cotton in two worlds, Europe and America.

CARPENTER, BAGGOT & CO.—We think, all told, that the situation is bullish, and that the market is shaping up very nicely for further advance, based on the law of supply and demand.

SANGER & ETTLESON—The rapid decrease in the stocks at the interior towns and the heavy movement of cotton into spinners' hands is gradually building up a statistical position which will force the world to the conviction that a large crop next year is an absolute necessity.

BAILY & MONTGOMERY—It is very doubtful if we shall witness much if any setback in prices until after the Easter holidays.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Business in grain was dull generally, in wheat particularly so. Nothing was done with exporters. But the interior demand for the cash property was large, and that fact, as had been the case all the week, explained the undertone of firmness that characterized the wheat market throughout this country and Europe. The market was finally steady in tone at net unchanged prices to an advance of ¼c. The cash markets closed firm, about as follows; No. 2 red, 87c, elevator, and 89c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 88c, free on board, afloat. Interior receipts of wheat, 387,000 bushels against 288,000 bushels last year.

CORN.—The cash situation as to corn remains very strong—strong enough to have caused speculative short covering. Receipts have actively decreased and an active demand for the cash article is reported at all points with country holders arbitrary in their views. The market closed very firm. Nothing was done for export. The local cash market closed firm. We quote: No. 2 corn, nominal, in elevator, and 53½@54c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 56c, and No. 2 yellow, 56c, free on board, afloat. The interior receipts of corn were only 365,000 bushels against 619,000 bushels last year; seaboard clearances of corn were 432,000 bushels.

FAR EASTERN TRADE ACTIVE.

Merchandise Pouring Into Japan and Manchuria.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—American consular officers in Asia report broadening commercial activity in the Orient.

Consul General Miller reports from Yokohama that the merchandise arrivals at that Japanese port in 1905 amounted to $26,000,000 for the principal articles alone, cotton and cotton manufactures leading, with $10,236,000. The United States bought nearly all of the 22,876,000 pounds of tea which Yokohama exported last year, and 74 per cent. of her $36,000,000 raw silk exports.

Consul General Sammons, in a letter to the Bureau of Manufactures from Niuchwang, describes the present harbor facilities of that developing Manchurian port, at which American vessels are beginning to arrive with cargoes of kerosene, cotton goods, lumber, and flour. To handle this increasing trade arrangements have been made for a regular steamship service from New York to Oriental ports, including Niu-chwang. More goods were imported into Niuchwang in 1905 than in any previous year.

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

On the appearance yesterday of a bank statement showing, instead of a surplus reserve, a deficit of two and one-half millions the stock market sold off sharply for a few minutes, then got strong again in the last quarter of an hour, and the head of one of the largest wire houses in Wall Street said:

"Wonderful—perfectly wonderful! On top of a recovery of 3 to 10 per cent. in prices all around we get 30 per cent. money, then a bank statement which gives us a deficit in surplus reserves, and see the market. If we were loaded up with stocks what a different story it would be."

"The strength of the situation lies in the fact that we brokers haven't any stocks in a vulnerable position. Our own business is highly representative, in that it covers pretty much the whole country, and year in and year out we carry a great many stocks, but you might go through our accounts to-day with a fine-tooth comb and you couldn't find 10,000 shares of speculative stocks likely to come upon the market. Our clients are using us chiefly as bankers. They have margins of 50 to 80 per cent. on their stuff, and we simply hold it for them. That's why you haven't had a panic his week. But where are the stocks?"

The bull movement inaugurated week before last under highly professional auspices was evidently premature in one respect—viz., that the money necessary to finance a broader speculation was not available, and last week the screws were applied to the stock market through the money market. The effect of an advance in call money to 30 per cent. was to check the market without setting it back seriously. Union Pacific, which had advanced more than ten points from the low point of March, fell back 3; Amalgamated Copper, which had advanced more than 13 points, fell back about 4, and so on through the list.

If it was apparent that the bull movement had been injudiciously timed with reference to money market conditions, it was equally apparent that it was based upon strong technical conditions, else two-thirds of the recovery from the low prices of March could not have been retained in the face, first, of extensive profit taking by professional operators, and, secondly, the inaccessibility of money to speculative borrowers.

Conservative people, with old-fashioned habits of thought, see call money at 30 per cent. with no surplus reserve left in the banks and demand stock market liquidation. But evidently it is no easy thing to bring about such liquidation. It must be conceded that the stocks are well protected when they will not come out under such conditions as have prevailed in the last few days.

Speculators, on the other hand, have lost reverence, apparently, for so prosaic a matter as bank reserves, and propose to bull the stock market on general conditions, with or without money. They go on the theory that the money somehow must be provided. They went on that theory last December when they ran a bull campaign through a period of prohibitive money rates, and they won out. They believe it can be done again.

There is really nothing on which to sell stocks. Brokers may not choose to load up with stocks while money is tight, may discourage speculation, may criticise impetuous manipulation, and all that, but they invariably add that they cannot advise anybody to sell stocks with conditions so prosperous throughout the country. They want speculation to wait upon the money market, and speculation will not wait—at least, professional speculation will not wait. The bull crowd is willing to pay the price for money and add to its stocks.

The stocks that gave the best account of themselves last week were Amalgamated Copper, Union Pacific, Pennsylvania, and the United States Steel issues, and these are the stocks to whose leadership the general list is most responsive. They are the stocks in which the bull element expects to see further and very pronounced improvement as soon as money market conditions are more favorable to general speculation.

Union Pacific is in a class by itself. It is the best trading stock in the market. It is the stock that traders buy when they are bullish. It has an unlimited market, and there is room in it for a tremendous speculation. It is one of the few high-priced railroad issues in which a free speculation is possible.

Most of the other stocks of like traditions have passed beyond the reach of speculators. Burlington has disappeared entirely. There is a very limited market in Northern Pacific. Northwestern is too high to be traded in. The movements of St. Paul are spasmodic. Missouri Pacific is discredited among speculators. Thus, Union Pacific becomes an outlet for speculative initiative such as does not exist elsewhere in the whole market.

More than this, it is controlled with consummate manipulative skill. It is enormously rich, possessing free assets estimated at from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000, and there is almost every reason to believe that it will be advanced to a 7 per cent. dividend rate before the end of the year.

Union Pacific's leadership in a bull market cannot be dispensed with, but with this and perhaps one or two other exceptions, one being in behalf of Pennsylvania, the broad speculation in the immediate future has got to be in the lower-priced stocks, according to the judgment of men best qualified to speak on such matters. Money is likely to be in great demand for an indefinite time, and it behooves the managers of a bull campaign in stocks to make their share of the money go as far as possible.

It will go just three times as far in stocks selling at an average price of 50 as in a corresponding number selling at an average price of 150. Brokers are beginning to adopt this idea. They see that there is more room for public speculation in stocks like Rock Island, Southern Railway common, Mexican Central, and Erie than in the high-priced stocks; that these low-priced stocks have not advanced commensurately with the higher-priced issues in the last two and one-half years, and that they offer the maximum of opportunity with the minimum of risk.

There is revived hope of a bull campaign in the Pennsylvania group of stocks. Pennsylvania itself was turned to the bull side of the market last week in an unexpected manner, advancing on a more aggressive kind of buying than had been seen before for many weeks. The latest issue of convertible bonds was released week before last by the underwriting syndicate and is now upon the open market. It is understood that only about one-half of the bonds were placed before the expiration of the syndicate. The market for these bonds would be greatly benefited by a pronounced improvement in the speculative position of Pennsylvania stock.

The collateral stocks of the Pennsylvania group, notably Norfolk & Western and Baltimore & Ohio, are well thought of by operators looking for things to bull. It is said that arrangements have already been made to bring these stocks into greater prominence as soon as general market conditions are propitious.

It is the fashion nowadays to scold the market. Everybody scolds it. When it goes up it is scolded, when it goes down it is scolded on the ground that it is doing penance for having previously gone up, and its behavior in general during the last two and one-half years has been criticised as highly untraditional.

A stock market is what it is, and not what it ought to be. The people who have made money in it since 1904 are those who have taken it on its own terms.

The April crop report, which will be published on Tuesday, is expected to make a very favorable showing.

TRANSATLANTIC WIRELESS

American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Cork, Ireland, April 6, 1906.

Abraham White, President
American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Co.
42 Broadway, New York.

MESSAGES BEING RECEIVED CLEARLY.
TRANSATLANTIC WIRELESS NOW ASSURED.
DE FOREST.

On behalf of the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company I wish to announce the successful transmission of aerographic communication across the Atlantic Ocean direct, without a single relay, from the Manhattan Beach wireless station, employing 40 kilowatts (30,000 volts of electricity) at the rate of 20 words per minute, to a point on the other side of the Atlantic in Glengarriff Harbour, County of Cork, Ireland, where Dr. Lee De Forest, the young American inventor of wireless telegraphy, received accurately and clearly the messages recently aerographed to him. The following confirmation was received by me on April 6 from Dr. Lee De Forest:—

"MESSAGES BEING READ CLEARLY. TRANSATLANTIC WIRELESS NOW ASSURED."

Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the distinguished inventor of the telephone, has co-operated with us in this great work, having sent a representative to England with Dr. Lee De Forest for the purpose of conducting experiments with his tetrahedral kites in connection with the De Forest Wireless Telegraphy system, the kites being elevated and used instead of the ordinary masts. The kites were originally intended for practically exclusive use in connection with aerial navigation, but have been found to be exceedingly useful and valuable for wireless work, as was recently demonstrated also at Dr. Bell's laboratory in Virginia when wireless messages were received from distant points. Dr. Alexander Graham Bell is now in England, and is co-operating with us in this work. The De Forest wireless system now holds the world's wireless record in both overland and marine transmission. Its work for the United States Government; President Roosevelt, during his memorable trip from New Orleans to Washington on the United States battleship West Virginia; the Standard Oil Company, whose oil-carrying steamers employ the De Forest system exclusively, and the many steamship lines using this system is a matter of history. Our system now covers the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific seaboards, as well as a great chain of overland wireless stations from Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to New Orleans.

ABRAHAM WHITE, President.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The Alliance Realty Company has declared a quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent., placing the stock on a 7 per cent. basis. This is an increase of 1 per cent. over the rate previously paid by the company.

The Directors of the Public Service Corporation have elected James P. Dusenberry to a place on the board to succeed Senator Dryden, who presented his resignation as a Director of the company last week.

The new ship canal at Buffalo, used jointly by the Pennsylvania Road and the Buffalo & Susquehanna Iron Company, has just been opened. It completes an all-water route direct to the iron company's furnaces and the railroad's cars from the iron ore fields of Minnesota. This direct water carriage gives Buffalo an advantage of $1.50 a ton over Pittsburg, to which city the ore has to be trans-shipped by rail from Conneaut, Ohio.

The Brooklyn plants of the Standard Rope and Twine Company have been bid in under foreclosure by the Reorganization Committee for $400,000. The Boston and New Jersey plants of the old concern, which has been succeeded by the Standard Cordage Company, were sold for $500,000 and $27,000, respectively.

The Delaware & Eastern Railroad, which is constructing a line across Delaware County, N. Y., has completed fifteen miles of its road, which, when completed, will have a length of forty-nine miles. The road connects with the New York, Ontario & Western in the southern part of Delaware County, and with the Ulster & Delaware in the north.

Invest in an

Established Mining Industrial

The Safest and Best Paying Security in the World.

Failures are never made in mining except through prospects and uncertainties.

With a Developed Mine and Machinery to handle it a single failure has never been known.

The bulk of all great fortunes in the world came from mines, and there is not a rich man anywhere who has not received his wealth, all or in part, from his profits in mining. The millions of dollars paid each year in dividends bring no comfort to you unless you grasped opportunities that were offered in the past to every one.

Ultra-Conservatism Breeds Poverty.
Enterprise Made the Millionaire of To-day.

The Homestake, United Verde, Alaska-Tredwell, Calumet and Hecla, Mollie Gibson, Portland and hundreds of others have paid fortunes to their stockholders. They are those who preferred to have their money work for them and not allow it to rest sleeping in savings banks.

I am offering the stock of a company equal to any of the above that will go down in the world's history among the great producers of gold and silver, and soon be numbered as one of the largest dividend payers.

It is a thoroughly developed property, the mines are producing hundreds of thousands of ton of ore on the dumps ready for treatment, and there are seemingly inexhaustible bodies of ore that await mining.

The building of a hundred stamp mill and a complete Cyanide Plant is going on, and in a few months the properties will be one of the most thoroughly equipped in the world.

Now is the opportunity and the time to purchase this stock, at its first offering, at the ground floor price, when the greatest profits are to be made, and for the short time that it is open for public subscription.

Let me send you particulars. You cannot afford to neglect looking into it if you are at all interested in your future.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 7.—Trading was light to-day, and further declines were made. Losses were not limited to the speculative and favorite issues, but became scattered through the inactive list. Houston Oil preferred held up fairly well at first, but finally broke 4½ points, to 43½, dropping at the close ½ point more. Seaboard new common was the only strong feature on the list, advancing ½ point, to 31.

In the bond list United Railways free incomes came into prominence for a three-eighths recovery. Anacostia and Potomac 5s broke 1 point. The close was firm, but dull. Sales: Bonds, $43,000; shares, stock, 690. The list:

AMERICAN OLYMPIC TEAM A UNIQUE AGGREGATION

Study of Personnel Reveals Interesting Characteristics.

STRONG AND WELL BALANCED

Diminutive Stature and Lack of Athletic Physique Marked — Small, Wiry, Nervous Type Favored.

Looking at the athletes that will represent this country in the Olympic Games at Athens, when they were collected together the night before their departure for Greece, the most striking characteristic was the absence of the "athletic physique." There was none of that remarkable development that one is accustomed to associate with athletic skill. Neither were the men of the slender, agile, clean-limbed type one pictures for a sprinter. They were, with two or three exceptions, rather under-sized in stature, quick, wiry, and nervous, absolutely unlike any world's champion one can call to mind, unless it be the one who is a member of the team, Myer Prinstein. He is as near a type of the whole number as can be suggested. Big Josh Mitchell, with his massive chest and shoulders, like the circus strong man, looked painfully out of place in such a lot. So did Bob Edgren, who resembled more the overweight football player, and Martin Sheridan. Even "Billy" Shick, who, though too heavy, is still the tall, sinewy, swift sprinter, was unique in this gathering.

There is scarcely one tall man in the lot. Of the sprinters, save Shick, not one is of good height. Little Archie Hahn is a decided midget, Moulton little larger, and Queyrouze and Eaton, slight and slender, but not in the way that suggest sprinting.

Those who have been disposed to find fault with the team on the ground that it excluded some of the most able athletes in America are querulous and captious critics. With the possible exception of Sheppard, there has been no man in America who did not receive every opportunity to go. The absence from the team of Parsons, the champion sprinter; of Amsler, the best American hurdler, and Hail, the best collegiate distance runner, and men of their stripe, is due solely to a proper regard for collegiate requirements. Reasons were given for the exclusion of Sheppard.

The team is stronger in the sprints than in any other department. It has but one man to fear—Nigel Barker from Australia. In the other running events it has its work cut out for it. The hurdles and jumps seem safe, unless O'Connor and Leary, the Irish jumpers, go and are in superb condition, while the weights, the vault, and the swimming events seem certain victories, in spite of the French champion. Gonder's record vault is 12 feet 1½ inches.

Of the sprinters Queyrouze is perhaps most interesting. He is the first Southerner who has ever beaten ten seconds in the hundred. Yet a year ago he was unknown, and eighteen months ago he had never thought of running. Only 23 years old, he has spent ten years about gymnasiums, but never once did he suspect his sprinting ability till he happened to be clocked for twenty-five yards indoors in 0:03 1-5, which is world's record time. Then some attention began to be paid to him, and last Spring indoors he ran his first race in 0:10 1-5 for the 100 yards, and broke the tape in the Southern championships in 0:09 4-5.

Queyrouze is in splendid shape, and is likely to prove the strongest man on the team, as Shick, who is a more seasoned and probably to-day a better runner, is still feeling the results of his recent illness. Eaton, though remarkably fast for the shorter distances, still finds 100 yards just a bit beyond his strength, and Moulton and Hahn have been campaigning so long that it is doubtful if either will ever equal their 9 4-5 records again. Both are bully racers, however, and always at their best when they have the stiffest opponents.

Hillman, at the quarter, has the best record of any of the men on the team, but there are those who believe that Lightbody can outrun him. With half-milers like Parsons and Valentine at hand, it seems as though Lightbody should be tried at the quarter. Though without a mark better than 0:50, the wonderful little Chicago runner has shown such speed at the half and such ability in races that it is believed he can go in 0:49. When he made his record of 1:56 for the half mile he ran his first quarter in 0:55 1-5, and romped home in the second quarter. Parsons of Yale has a 1:56 mark, and so has Valentine, but neither has the ability that Lightbody possesses when it comes to the test.

J. P. Sullivan is another runner, like Lightbody, who never has shown his full possibilities, in the opinion of competent judges. His running is familiar to New York followers of athletics. His difficulty is his failure to take his work seriously enough. Had he Frank's disposition, Sullivan would make New Yorkers forget that Sheppard existed. Neither Bonhag nor Cohn has his ability, but both have infinitely more determination.

Frank is essentially a plodder; so are Spring and Forshaw. The latter is as striking an example of the made athlete as one will find. Four years ago he could not run at all. His style was ungainly and loose. He had no idea of pace or form, and ran like a last hope. He ran in the mile events mostly, and finished at the three-quarter pole. How he come to find form no one knows.

Sullivan, too, is a big surprise. Sheridan looks like an athlete, though his heavily built, muscular form suggests strength rather than skill, but Sullivan looks like a sprinter, though diminutive and undersized, like the rest of the team. He is a good runner and average jumper, and makes his strongest bid for the all-around championship on this account: He has a big advantage over Sheridan in his javelin throwing, having tried the game, which is peculiar to Greece, and attains an accuracy that enables him to hit a six-inch mark at seventy-five feet.

The other three Western men—Glover, Friend, and Kerrigan—are all slight in build, ranging in height from 5 feet 7 inches to 5 feet 5 inches. Kerrigan, the smallest of the lot, is different from any high jumper the East has ever developed. Usually long of limb, sinewy, and supple, Kerrigan is the exact antithesis of the typical jumper. How with his short legs, muscular as they are, he manages to clear 6 feet 2 inches is puzzling.

Friend's leg development is like Kerrigan's, and betrays his jumping ability. He is somewhat taller and uses his superior length of limb to good advantage in both the hurdles and the broad jump. His hurdling style is faultless, but he has not the speed to better 0:15 4-5 over the high sticks. Had he more speed he might also increase his jumping record of 23 feet 4½ inches.

Glover is built like Friend, and is also well developed in the muscles needed in his specialty. He has attained his height in vaulting, however, by virtue of suppleness quite as much as by his spring and lift. He has twice bettered 12 feet in trials, so is able to cope with Gondor, though he has not essayed more than 11 feet 6 inches in training this year. He is, however, another man best developed by a close competition. The peculiar style of vaulting used abroad favors the foreign over the American vaulter, since climbing the pole is allowed, whereas here it is prohibited.

Leavitt is the only other man with whom New York is unfamiliar. Though holding a record of 0:15 4-5 in the high hurdles, low hurdling is his forte. Leavitt's sprinting and jumping are better than his hurdling. He does not combine form with speed. He is built like Hillman, and is probably as fast for short distances, but Hillman ought to outhurdle him any time they meet.

Big Wager on American Athletes.

One of the largest wagers ever made—$10,000—by an American on an amateur sporting event, has been laid by Capt. Frank T. Huntoon on the chances of the American Olympic team at Athens. Capt. Huntoon is an enthusiast regarding athletic matters, and a close student of amateur athletes. He believes the Omerican team will carry off all the big prizes in the International contest. Capt. Huntoon not only bet his money on the thirty-four athletes of the team, but also equipped them with fifty cases of American mineral water for exclusive use during their ocean trip and extended sojourn in Greece.

Crescent Shooters Win in Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 7.—The Crescent Athletic Club of New York this afternoon won final honors in the trap shooting match with the Boston Athletic Association team by the narrow margin of 11 birds. The match took place on the grounds of the defeated club, at Newton. At the first shoot held in Brooklyn, March 24, the Boston cracks were beaten by a total of 634 to 609. IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

To judge from purchases involving buildings on Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, the demand for high grade properties is yet far from satisfied, and in this particular the dealings of last week showed marked improvement. While minor trading has continued in undiminished volume, the recent scarcity of large individual deals has been in marked contrast with the rapid succession of important transactions announced a month or six weeks ago.

The difficulty which Adolph Lewisohn has experienced in his efforts to remain an investor in New York real estate is almost pathetic. He has bought within the last two years two different properties on Fifth Avenue—No. 314, near Thirty-second Street, and the building at 538 and 540, which he has just sold. In both cases speculators had taken three or four profits out of the properties, and when Mr. Lewisohn bought them, on an income basis little if any better than 4 per cent., he was generally acclaimed the Simon Pure investor. But he has become speculator in spite of himself. He sold 314 at a handsome profit and has now accepted for 538 and 540 the offer of the Philadelphian, who says that a man need be only 25 per cent. right to make money in New York real estate.

This purchase by Mr. Isman also presents a very definite answer to the question of whether Fifth Avenue values have reached or are anywhere near their limit. The Euclid Building, near by, has afforded evidence of the same sort. Here were two properties that had gone rapidly through the various speculative stages and, after being improved, had been classed for a brief interval as investments, when they suddenly became again speculative ventures as the result of speculators' confidence that these locations have yet to yield much higher rents.

Other business of the week contained not a few interesting features. At 61 Cortlandt Street, the City Investing Company bought a lot which connects with its larger holdings at the rear on Greenwich and Washington Streets. A neighborhood that seldom figures in realty reports appeared in connection with the sale of a corner at Sixth Avenue and Ninth Street. The upper Fifth Avenue section produced two deals of importance, affecting the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Seventy-fifth Street, and the fine dwelling at 11 East Eighty-fourth Street, while it was also announced that the corners at Lexington Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street, long vacant and formerly owned by the Mount Sinai Hospital, are about to be improved.

LONG ISLAND TRACT SOLD.

Operator Gets Conover Property at Islip—North Shore Conditions.

The Conover estate at Islip and Bay Shore, consisting of 500 acres, has been sold to William H. Moffitt through E. W. King of Bay Shore, as broker, for $50,000. This estate extends to within 500 feet of the South Country Road on Saxson's Avenue and along both sides of this avenue for a distance of over a mile. It adjoins the Ceballos and McNamee places. Mr. Moffitt has bought this land for development. The property will be immediately subdivided and placed on the market in small parcels.

One hundred and fifty acres of the tract lie south of the Islip Boulevard, which runs parallel with the South Country Road, and 350 acres lie east of the Bay Shore Horse Show Grounds, on a high tableland running to the Orowok Brook on the east and the Conover Brook on the west.

A syndicate in which several prominent capitalists are said to be interested has been organized to deal in property in Long Island City and Queens. It has just made its first purchase, consisting of 400 lots in the Astoria and Steinway sections, through H. P. Williams. The same broker has also sold for W. C. Martin a plot of fifty lots in the Astoria section.

On the north shore of the island conditions of great activity still prevail. Samuel Swett of Huntington, in speaking of the situation, said:

"The great activity in Long Island real estate is caused by a realization on the part of the public that farm land on the island has, up to within a few months, been selling in the majority of instances for less than one-half of its real value. Now it is fully understood that the Pennsylvania and Long Island Railroads are not only about to spend millions, but have already spent millions, toward the development of the island and its railway service.

"There is no doubt that within a few months one can be landed thirty-five miles out on Long Island in less time than it now takes under ordinary circumstances to reach New Rochelle, and upon reaching the point of destination there is real country on every hand, and on one side the Great South Bay and the ocean and on the other Long Island Sound, providing the finest yachting waters in the world."

Lee Kohns has bought the Franklin Warner place, on King's Point, for about $65,000, and will make it his Summer home.

Bramwell Davis has bought the Henry Schenck farm, at Thomaston, consisting of twelve acres, and will develop the property.

The Duryea and Thorne farms, at Great Neck, of 234 and 135 acres, respectively, have been bought by the Desmond Dunne Company at a price said to be nearly $500,000.

The Peter H. Meeker farm, on the Union Turnpike, near Flushing, has been sold to the Brill syndicate, through Ryan & Watson. The tract contains about fifty acres, of which thirty-six acres are upland. The reported price was $40,000.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company has sold twenty-four lots at Amityville for $4,888.

ODD HISTORY REVEALED BY MOTT STREET DEAL

Lot Held for Eighty Years by Buyer at Tax Sale.

ALL HE PAID WAS $22.86

The announcement in Friday's TIMES that 304 Mott Street had been conveyed on the previous day for the first time since 1796 told only the closing event in the odd history of that property, from a legal and real estate point of view. This lot was sold in 1819, because its owner had failed to pay an assessment of $22.86 for the opening of Canal Street, and it is only now, after eighty-seven years, that the heirs of that owner re-enter upon possession of the property.

In 1819 what are now known as 302 and 304 Mott Street, the former a livery stable and the latter Italian tenements, were vacant lots—Lot 42 and 43 on the map of the land of John Dyckman. Alderman Dyckman he was, a man of prominence in his day, and owner of a large estate of irregular boundaries, extending from Prince Street almost to Bleecker Street, and from the Bowery, on which it fronted, to Greene Street on the west.

He died about 1790. His estate was divided among his children, and after the division into lots the premises above mentioned were conveyed by his daughter to Martin Hoffman by deed recorded in 1796. From that time until a day or two ago the property has failed to pay its toll at the Register's Office, for in that long period no deed affecting the lots was ever recorded.

Martin Hoffman was an auctioneer and dealt in real estate on a large scale. He owned numerous parcels in the downtown section of the city, among others the building at the southeast corner of Wall and Hanover Streets, now occupied by Brown Brothers & Co. The records show that in the latter part of the eighteenth century he dealt also in lands in Ulster, Delaware, Otsego, Clinton, Onondaga, Cayuga, and other counties throughout the State.

In 1819 the Mott Street lots, probably overlooked in the press of more important enterprises, were sold to pay an assessment for $22.86 for the opening of Canal Street. The owner had two years within which to redeem the lots from the assessment sale, and on his failure to do so, in 1821, a sixty-year lease was given to James Boyle, the purchaser at the tax sale. Boyle's descendants still remain in possession of the livery stable.

Daniel Higgins took the northerly lot from Boyle, or such rights therein as Boyle could give, and put up the front and rear tenements. These are still standing, and have always yielded a handsome return on the original investment, which, aside from the cost of the building, amounted to only $52.76 for both lots. But Higgins met with financial reverses, and his rights under the tax lease with the buildings, went to P. Mulvihill, whose representatives have only very recently yielded up their long possession.

Martin Hoffman died in 1828, owning these lots subject, of course, to the tax lease. He left fourteen children, all of whom are now dead, but some of whom attained prominence in business as well as in philanthropic and other enterprises. Gov. Hoffman and the Rev. Dean Hoffman belonged to collateral branches of the family. Judge Murray Hoffman was a son of Martin Hoffman.

In 1901 suit was begun in behalf of the Hoffman heirs to recover the property, and the case was fought to the Court of Appeals. The sixty-year term granted by the tax lease expired in 1881, and the twenty years of alleged adverse possession expired a few months before the bringing of the suit. The courts decided that, as the parties had gone into possession under the tax lease, and had not committed any overt act after the termination of the lease to indicate that they were holding the property in defiance of the rights of the Hoffman heirs, their claim of adverse possession could not be sustained. In actions of this kind, unlike any other suits at law, three trials are possible, and the second round through the Trial and Appellate Courts was begun, but before proceeding far an arrangement was made under which the Hoffman heirs went into possession on April 1.

The heirs number about sixty, and are scattered all over the world. For purposes of conveyancing, the title was transferred to a corporation known as the Martin Hoffman Estate. To effect this the signature of each of the sixty heirs was necessary. On Friday that number of powers of attorney and deeds were recorded in the Register's Office, and the toll which the property had escaped paying to the recording officer for the whole of the nineteenth century was more than made up, as the recording fees on the transaction amounted to about $70.

Lawyers in commenting on the transaction expressed wonder that, being the descendants or devisees of descendants of a man who died nearly eighty years ago, all the parties in interest were adults, and that not a single minor heir was encountered to necessitate an application to the court for leave to sell.

BROOKLYN'S ADDED ACRES.

How City's Ashes Are Used to Reclaim Gravesend Marshes.

In a certain part of the Gravesend section of Brooklyn comfortable houses stand to-day on sites that did not exist three years ago. Beyond these stretch many acres of made land—the filled-in portion of Coney Island Creek. A tract of considerable extent was created in 1903 and 1904 from the triangle of marshy land bounded on the west by Ocean Parkway. Into this morass were poured day after day carloads of ashes from Brooklyn's dwellings and factories.

For a year past the filling-in work has been going forward at the Harway Pond tract, near Unionville. Every twenty-four hours 105 cars on an average arrive at this point, each with thirty-six cubic yards of ashes and street sweepings. The huge buckets on these cars are emptied into dumping cars by means of a traveling derrick, and these are pushed out to the end of the switch and dumped.

The enormous quantity of material deposited is rapidly filling in the unsightly marsh, and this process will continue until the bulkhead, soon to be built along Coney Island Creek, is reached. The tract thus formed will be valuable property, and the near-by residents along Harway Avenue are congratulating themselves on the prospect of a rise in real estate values consequent upon the reclamation of the adjoining swamp.

The thirteen collecting stations built by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company are located at strategic points throughout the city. At these stations ashes and rubbish are received from the carts.

As the steel buckets nearest the dumping edge are filled an ingenious arrangement of steel traveling cranes carries them backward and across to a waiting flat car. These cavernous buckets, weighing almost two tons empty and about seven tons full, are filled with ashes only. As they are placed on the flat car, four of them to the car, they are covered with heavy canvas and the four corners are fastened down securely by ropes.

The ash car, bearing four buckets containing the ashes brought in by twenty-four carts, then begins its journey to Coney Island. The extreme distance is thirteen miles, the station most remote from the dumping grounds being located on Manhattan Avenue, between Nassau and Driggs Avenues. These ash cars proceed by the routes that are lightest in passenger traffic.

The perfecting of the organization and the equipment goes forward unceasingly. To do away with the necessity of transferring the contents of the ash cars sent out from the stations to the dumping cars which are shunted along the switches built out over the dumping area, an experimental car has been constructed which will put out of service the steel bucket and flat cars as well as the cranes and dumping cars now in use at the point of deposit. This newly invented car will receive the ashes direct from the hopper into which the collecting carts drop their contents and convey them by the nearest route to the grounds, where it will dump automatically. One such car is now in service, and has proved so successful that others are to be built in the near future. This will mark a long advance step in the development of the system for the disposal of Brooklyn's waste.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Bracelets and Necklaces Assessed at 60 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision by T. S. Sharretts the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a claim filed by C. B. Richard & Co. of New York regarding the customs assessment on bracelets and necklaces composed in chief value of glass beads. The board found that the articles are articles made of glass, and therefore dutiable at the rate of 60 per cent. The importer's claim was that the merchandise should be deemed dutiable under the provision for "toys" with duty at the rate of 35 per cent., but this contention was deemed by the board to be without merit. General Appraiser Sharretts also wrote a decision denying a claim made by the American Shipping Company of Chicago. The Collector assessed a 45 per cent. duty on violin cases composed of paper, each case containing a violin. The importers insisted that the merchandise should be granted a lower rate of duty, but this was denied by the board.

Other importers' claims overruled by the board were filed by Spingarn Brothers, Cohen & Rosenberger, A. & H. Veith, L. Metzger & Co., New York; William Tonk & Brother Company, and M. A. Donohue & Co., Chicago; G. A. Mayer, Morris Goldberg and others, Albert Lorsch & Co., F. W. Woolworth and others, and R. F. Downing & Co., New York.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

BALDWIN BROTHERS' DECORATION COMPANY.—Baldwin Brothers' Decoration Company, interior decorations, at 432 Fifth Avenue, has made an assignment to William C. Wolf. Theodore H. Friend, attorney for the company, said that the trouble was due to dull business and losses on contracts. The liabilities are less than $9,000 and assets small. The company was incorporated on March 5, 1904, with a capital stock of $5,000. F. Frederic Baldwin was President and George F. Hopkins Secretary and Treasurer.

USONA LIGHT COMPANY.—A meeting of creditors of the Usona Light Company, manufacturers of incandescent mantles at 247-251 Third Avenue, has been held at the office of Morris Kamber, 99 Nassau Street, and the committee of creditors reported in favor of a settlement at 35 cents on the dollar, payable 15 cents cash, 10 cents in a note at four months, indorsed by a man rated worth at least $50,000, and 10 cents in a note at eight months, indorsed, which many of the creditors accepted. The liabilities are $22,000 and assets $13,000.

HAVE YOU EVER HEARD OF THE

and of how many happy and independent HOME OWNERS it has made throughout the UNITED KINGDOM?

We are operating the same safe and conservative system here in OUR COUNTRY, and it has proven very successful, because the money you have paid heretofore in rent each month through our system is a payment towards a HOME, and you pay no more than you now pay in rent, and in a few years you will have YOUR HOME all paid for.

You have to pay only $5.00 down on each thousand you wish to invest in a home; $2.50 per month on each thousand (for three months), receiving credit for $2.00 of the $2.50. After the home has been purchased for you, you then pay us $7.00 per month per thousand, receiving credit for $5.00 of the $7.00 each month on the principal.

Douglas Manor

The opening sales in Douglas Manor have broken all records. Never in the history of New York real estate has the success of Douglas Manor been equalled, and never have there been such high grade buyers. Most purchasers are buying for a home, and many will begin building at once.

Nature has done more for Douglas Manor than any other property on Long Island. The restrictions and plan of development adopted will forever preserve all its natural beauty, and the class of purchasers insures a strictly high grade residential district.

Douglas Manor is a sub-division of the famous Douglas estate, a beautiful private park over 100 years old, containing 2,500 restricted lots, with over a mile of shore front on Long Island Sound, covered with magnificent forest trees. It is within the limits of New York City, and will be within 20 minutes of Broadway when the Pennsylvania tunnels are completed.

To reach Douglas Manor, take the Long Island Railroad from the East Thirty-fourth Street Ferry to Douglaston. The most convenient Sunday trains leave the New York side at 10.20 A. M., 11.50 A. M., 1 P. M., 2 P. M., 3 P. M., 4 P. M. Send for maps, beautiful colored views, and free tickets.

BARGAIN IN LONG ISLAND LOTS

I have control of a large tract of high land near Westhampton Station, and am subdividing it. It has a large frontage on the "Old Country Road" running north beyond the Long Island Railroad tracks. The southerly end of the property is within

Two Minutes' Walk of the Head of Quantuck Bay.

The land is all high and dry and within easy walking distance of the Great South Bay and the Atlantic Ocean.

It has been held in one family for 60 years. It has just been surveyed and the title guaranteed by the

I will sell a city lot now for $25.00, or to

SPECULATORS AND INVESTORS

Only $100 cash is needed to secure the 120 lots, and the balance can remain on long-time payments.

The millions of money that are now being spent on Tunnels, Railroads, and Electric Roads ought to enhance the value of this property FOURFOLD within one year.

The whole south shore of Long Island is going to be very valuable, but the Hamptons (of which WESTHAMPTON is the nearest to New York) are noted for being the first lands that are reached that are comparatively free from mosquitoes. Westhampton has a

It has also good hotels and a number of very handsome cottages occupied by Prominent New York Families.

The Long Island Railroad Co. is building a new $15,000 STATION at Westhampton, plans of which can be seen at my office. Part of our property lies between this station and the beach. Remember, you get 120 lots for $1,000, (a little over $8.00 per lot.)

FLORAL PARK

THE HOME OF THE FLOWERS

Long Island's Most Accessible Suburb.

IN less than three years, on completion of the Pennsylvania R. R. Tunnel, luxuriously appointed and electrically propelled trains will carry you direct from the heart of New York to this delightful spot in 20 minutes.

RAPID TRANSIT FACILITIES MAKE REAL ESTATE VALUES.

WHEN THE NEW TUNNELS AND BRIDGES will practically eliminate the East River as a dividing line in Greater New York, and hundreds of thousands of human beings will be carried to and fro in modernly equipped, comfortable coaches, at 60 miles an hour, what will then be the value of land in Floral Park?

IN THE HISTORY OF SUBURBAN REAL ESTATE THERE HAS NEVER BEEN AN OPPORTUNITY EQUALLING THIS FOR QUICK, PROFITABLE INVESTMENTS.

Every Dollar of the Millions Which the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Belmont Trolley System Are Spending for Quick Rapid Transit Means an Advance in the Value of Lots at Floral Park.

FLORAL PARK is in the centre of all these gigantic transit developments, and supplementing them there is a new trolley line now being built on the Jericho Turnpike, which passes through the very centre of our property. This line will run all the way from Long Island City to Hempstead, and is the main link in the great chain of trolley lines which will connect all the important towns in Queens Borough and Nassau County.

WE OFFER ON OUR NEWLY DEVELOPED TRACT

FLORAL PARK has all city improvements, several good hotels, and a number of stores. Its churches comprise the leading denominations. Its public school is one of the finest on Long Island, and its Fire Department is a model of its kind.

It has every advantage and convenience for the commuter. It is less than 15 miles from New York City, on the main line of the Long Island R. R., on which electric trains are now being operated from the Flatbush Avenue Station in Brooklyn. Forty trains a day.

REAL SPRING NOW HERE FOR SCULLY'S MARINERS

THEN THE BENCHES COME OUT

Unlike the Birds, the Sailor Men Seek the Tropics as Cold Winter Fades Away.

Calendars, Spring poets, and weather men to the contrary, yesterday was the beginning of Spring. Tom Scully says so, and Tom Scully is backed by Swanky, Slumgullion Jake, Cock-Eye Bill, and other habitués of his sailors' boarding house and marine grogshop in West Street, near Rector.

No matter what the newspapers may say about the arrival of Spring, with Scully and the sailors and longshoremen it arrives only when the "feelin'" comes, and then—and when—Tom opens wide the doors of the marine grogshop and puts a couple of deal benches on the sidewalk. When you see these benches crowded with loungers, dockhands, and sailors all smoking, drinking whisky sours and lager, and telling stories—then Spring has arrived.

Yesterday Tom Scully put out the benches, and they were filled at noon with men from all the ports and all the docks. Tom himself stood in the doorway with his hands clasped under his apron taking orders and bellowing to his assistant in the marine grogshop:

"Bring in three rock-ans with a clove hitch in two."

When they were brought the entry was made in chalk on a blackboard:

"Swanky 3 owe 2 frm Sattrday."

"Spring to a seaman and a longshoreman is different to the landsman's Spring," said Tom Scully to a reporter who happened along. "Longshoremen isn't sailors straight, but when you're talking about Spring they are, bein' as how they live within haul o' the sea and the docks an' the cargoes an' the bilge.

"How we know that Spring's come is more'n I could tell you. The feelin' just comes, same as you know it's gettin' near Chrismuss, by the feel o' things an' the weather. The boys aroun' here get restless for days afore it happens—Spring I mean—but the older boys, like Cock-Eye here and some others, they know when Spring's come. When the younger ones get restless too soon, they get out an' smell the wind and shake their heads. Then Swanky here, as has one arm and rheumatics, sits still fifteen minutes to see how the pains is comin'. And Slumgullion, who has got a ball in his shoulder fil'busterin', he says if it's feelin' heavy or light. Then they all shake they're heads. Naw, don't care if it shines to make the pitch bile—tain't Spring yet.

"But one day there's a sorter unanimous feelin' that it's here. I sees Cock-Eye nosin' aroun' the Noo Zealan' kauri boats and Slumgullion Jake akin' a shipmaster for a cook's berth on a windjammer an' Swanky wantin' to know how the San Blas cocoanut schooners is off f'r men. An' the other boys keep comin' in an' goin' out as if they wasn't sure whether the stove or the open air was the right thing. Then you can make up your mind it's Spring—the glib an' gleeful Spring, as the bo'sun pipes."

"And do they just sit and drink and smoke and swap yarns on the benches all Summer?" asked the reporter.

"Naw, there's the queer thing," said Tom Scully. "Sailors are like—chalk that up, Boggs, chalk it up!—sailors, as I was sayin', is queer birds. When Spring comes other birds come north; when Winter comes they go South. Sailor birds do the very opposite. When they're in the tropics an' it gets near Chrismuss, they get the feelin' to be where it's real Chrismuss, cold and frosty an' plum-puddin'-like. When they're in the cold place an' it gets on to Summer, they get the fever to be where its Summer without any mistake. That's a queer thing 'bout sailors.

"All them ducks you see here, 'ceptin' a few longshoremen as has fambiles, will be yo-ho-in' it all around the blamed hemisphere in a couple o' weeks. Cock-Eye'll make for New Zealand. He likes the kauri smell, an' it gives him a fever if he can't get enough of it. Slummp'll go round the Horn in a windjammer, and Swanky he'll ship in any blamed thing that'll relieve his feelin's. Same wi' the rest. Even Boggs, as is chalkin' up here, has got the itch to smell the Gulf weed.

"Yes, Sir, Spring has came."

OYSTERS BY 'PHONE DID IT.

Why the Sheriff Has Unsatisfied Executions Against Shea.

The news that the Sheriff was after John M. Shea, "the oyster king," yesterday, did not surprise the old-time oyster barge Captains, who at one time had a monopoly of the wholesale oyster trade of New York. They knew John Shea for many years, and knew his foster father, Tim Shea, and they said that Tim was lucky in getting out of the business years ago, before Sheriffs got into the habit of hunting up oyster dealers. And the way they accounted for John's downfall was novel.

"Oysters by telephone and telegraph did it," they said. And when asked what that meant, they explained that instead of going over to the docks on the west side to buy oysters nowadays, the big hotel and restaurant owners simply rang up the oyster planter on the telephone and ordered oysters direct, or gave the order to the oyster agent, who telegraphed it to the planter. Then the oysters arrived by railroad train.

That, they said, put the oyster barge business "in bad," and forced many of the old-time barge Captains to the wall. The telephone and telegraph had wiped out the middle man or jobber. Consequently many of the old wholesalers had been driven out of business, and instead of twenty or thirty oyster barges lined up along the North River piers, there were now two or three at the foot of Bloomfield Street.

John M. Shea owned one of these until two weeks ago. He did business under the name of the Tim Shea Oyster Company. He knew that the month of April containing the last of the oyster R's would soon be over, and that then it was simply a matter of closing down anyway, so he went out of business two weeks ago, leaving behind him some old debts.

To Deputy Sheriff Murray was handed two executions against Mr. Shea. They aggregated $3,234, and were in favor of George R. Wood. But when the Deputy Sheriff went in search of Shea property on which to levy he could find none. Not even an oyster. The business which had been established in 1870 by Tim Shea, and which finally drifted into the hands of John M. Shea had been broken up by the telephone and telegraph system of ordering oysters, and the Sheriff went back to his office to report "two unsatisfied oyster executions."

QUITS AFTER WALDO'S FINE.

Policeman Wegener Says Wife's Illness Made Him Late for Duty.

Policeman Robert F. H. Wegener of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, the son of a produce dealer at 813 Courtlandt Avenue, was twenty minutes late for reserve duty one night about three weeks ago. He told his Captain that his wife had been ill and that he thought he ought to be excused for his tardiness. Shortly afterward Deputy Commissioner Waldo fined him five days' pay for his offense.

"That's the limit, and I'm going to quit," he said to some of his fellow officers. He took a vacation of two weeks and upon reappearing for duty yesterday handed Capt. Patrick Corcoran his shield.

"I'm going to resign," he declared. "I've been on the force since last May and this is the first time I've been subjected to such a small piece of officiousness. The provision business for mine. I was commended last Memorial Day for saving the lives of three children in a runaway at Seventy-eighth Street and Western Boulevard, and now I've got to stand for such treatment as this from Waldo.

"My wife was sick and I had to run for the doctor. The twenty minutes in which I was engaged in doing this was the twenty minutes for which I've been fined. The police business ain't what it's cracked up to be."

Commissioner Waldo said he thought it strange that Wegener should wait two weeks after the trial before getting his indignation to the resigning point.

CHELSEA BANK TO MOVE.

Savings Institution Will Open Its New Building To-morrow.

The Chelsea Savings Bank moves to-morrow from its present quarters, at 259 West Thirty-fourth Street, to its new building, at 266 West Thirty-fourth Street, formerly occupied by the North River Savings Bank. The building, which has been entirely renovated, was on exhibition yesterday.

Irving M. Shaw, President of the Chelsea Savings Bank, was formerly Secretary and paying teller of the North River Savings Bank. The latter recently moved, and Mr. Shaw returns to the building where he once worked as Secretary. A feature to be instituted in the new building is an interest department, where 4 per cent. interest will be paid until further notice on deposits of from $5 to $3,000, and 3 per cent. on deposits over $3,000. The Ninth Ward Bank is one of the few banks which have tried a similar scheme, and, according to Mr. Shaw, it met with marked success.

KAHN BUYS A ROMNEY.

Otto H. Kahn of this city has purchased from Scott Fowles the picture called "Three Children of Captain Little," by George Romney, which is considered one of the best examples of that master's work. The canvas is well preserved. It hung for many years in an old house in the north of England. It was greatly admired at several exhibitions in London. Mr. Kahn said yesterday that the picture possessed all the characteristics for which Romney was noted, and that it was unquestionably a work of great value. He refused to state the price he had paid, but the picture is reported to have cost him $100,000.

CHURCHES GET BEQUESTS.

Miss Adam's Will Establishes a Trust Fund for the Benefit of Two.

Miss Fanny Sampson Adam, who died on March 2, left a trust fund of $30,000, the income of which will revert to St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church of this city and Christ Church at Oyster Bay, upon the death of Nathanial Graham McMaster of 669 Lexington Avenue, a relative. Bequests of jewelry and other personal property are made to the Duchesse de Dino, the Countess Gallifet, and the Countess Orlowski, formerly Adele L., Fanny, and Mabel Stevens.

Joseph Sampson Stevens inherits $25,000. The testatrix's house at Oyster Bay and her town house, 13 East Fortieth Street, go to a sister, Emily J. Sheldon, of Oyster Bay, for life.

CONRIED FREE AT LAST.

No License Charge Dismissed When He Appeared in Court.

Heinrich Conried, manager of the Metropolitan Opera House, was discharged by Magistrate Pool in Yorkville Court yesterday on the summons obtained two months ago by Acting Inspector Hodgins, charging him with operating the Irving Place Theatre without a license. He had several hearings.

Acting Inspector Hodgins informed Magistrate Pool several days ago that Conried had obtained the license and asked that the case be dismissed, but the Magistrate insisted that Conried appear in court. Conried did appear yesterday and on Hodgins stating the facts Magistrate Pool dismissed the summons.

Evening Lectures at Libraries.

The system inaugurated by the Board of Education last week of giving free evening lectures in the branch public libraries has proved successful. The libraries remain open, so that those who desire may take out for home reading books dealing with the subject of the lecture. The 135th Street, Tompkins Square, and Tremont Branch Libraries report a full attendance at the lectures.

St. Luke's Gets $15,000 Bequest.

By the will of Mrs. Sarah A. Sands, who died at Lakewood, N. J., on March 30, St. Luke's Hospital is benefited to the amount of $15,000. Three beds are to be endowed in memory of the testator's husband, Abraham B. Sands. The bulk of the estate goes to the children of the testatrix.

OLD FIREHOUSE GOES; VETERAN VAMPS ARE SAD

MARTY KEESE REMINISCENT

Marty Keese, custodian of the City Hall, and George W. Anderson, President of the Volunteer Firemen's Association of the City of New York, stood at Chambers and Centre Streets, yesterday afternoon, and deplored the demolition of the old firehouse on the corner. Brick by brick, and stone by stone the historic building was disappearing, and by to-morrow or Tuesday it will have been destroyed. From this house the old volunteers made their last run, and here, in 1865, the first paid company responded to the next alarm.

It was fitting that Keese and Anderson should witness the passing of a landmark so intimately associated with their lives, since Anderson joined the volunteers in 1854, while Keese became a member in 1858.

The old building had been razed until but one story remained, when the two old firemen went over to take a last look at the wreck. They talked with animation for a few minutes of famous men of long ago who had belonged to the Volunteers; then relapsed into silence. Their introspective vision swept away the County Court House—the monument of William M. Tweed—and the New Hall of Records. They saw instead the old almshouse and famous hosteleries, now but a name; the old city water works, museums, dance halls, and restaurants that have moved miles to the north.

The word "Mutual," in letters of stone, appeared over a doorway. The wreckers had almost reached that point in their downward course.

"I guess the old house is about sixty years old," said Marty Keese. "Three companies were housed here originally, at least their apparatus was here. They were Engine No. 22, called 'Protector'; Pearl Hose No. 28, and Mutual Hook and Ladder No. 1. I was foreman of M. T. Brennan Hose Company No. 60. Our house was around the corner in Elm Street, near Reade. In those days we had to haul the engines by hand, and after the fire was out we hauled them back again. Then we had to clean up. The only pay we got was abuse."

"Many's the time I've chased out to a fire in evening clothes," interrupted Anderson.

"Me, too," said Keese. "Why, I remember one night I left my wife at a ball to respond to an alarm. I got soaked for fair, and when my dress suit got dry the next day I'll be hanged if it wasn't brown instead of black."

Anderson chuckled.

He fingered the leaves of a dozen big volumes lovingly as he produced them, and showed the names of distinguished New Yorkers who had been firemen 125 years ago.

"We had no less than seven Mayors among us," said Keese, "including Gilroy, Tiemann, and Wickham. 'Pony' Farnham held a position which corresponds to Deputy Battalion Chief in Hook and Ladder No. 1. He was Colonel of the Eleventh New York Volunteers—my old regiment—and was killed at Bull Run.

"Right over there at the entrance to Brooklyn Bridge stood Charles N. Johnston's tavern, the Hope House. He was foreman of No. 22, and his place was a great resort for firemen and printers. He is alive and well-to-do, and now lives in Orange County. There used to be a pawnbroker named Hart, who would run into the Hope House and borrow what money Johnston had, paying him good interest, of course. One day he said to Johnston: 'Why don't you buy this place instead of paying rent?' But Johnston wouldn't take the advice, and ended by paying double the amount in rent before he was kicked out as a tenant than he would have had to pay to own it outright.

"The Volunteers disbanded in 1865. Anderson, here, was with the old Phoenix Company, and has been President of the Volunteers' Association for twenty-one years. He took the veterans on the famous transcontinental trip to San Francisco in 1887.

"The first paid company ran out of that house on a night in 1865. 'Joe' Douglas was the driver. The fire was in Pearl Street, near Broadway, in the rear of a carpenter's shop. My company gave them water, and I remember it as well as though it was yesterday."

Keese and Anderson are both native New Yorkers, and have spent their lives within sight of the City Hall. Keese was born at Grand and Lawrence Streets sixty-nine years ago. Lawrence Street is now West Broadway. Anderson was born in Warren Street, and is 72 years old.

"Yes, we're real New Yorkers," said Keese. "To the manner born—but without the house."

Anderson took his veterans to the Mardi Gras festival at New Orleans in 1892. Theirs was one of the few outside organizations to march in the parade. Their ranks are becoming decimated year by year, and but a few of the old Volunteers remain.

Keese and Anderson share the credit of founding the Firemen's Home, at Hudson, N. Y. Fifty old firemen live in the home, and it is planned to make accommodations for fifty more.

Concert with 1,000 Musicians and 1,000 Voices to be Given on May 15.

Preparations for the memorial concert to the late Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore, which have been under way for two years, are now nearly completed and the artistic success of the affair is considered assured. The concert will be given on May 15 with 1,000 musicians and 1,000 voices in Madison Square Garden. Victor Herbert, John Philip Sousa, Walter Damrosch, and Frank Damrosch will be the conductors.

Thomas M. Mulry is the President of the Gilmore Memorial Concert Committee, John D. Crimmins Treasurer, John P. Carter Secretary, and Andrew A. McCormick the general manager. On the committee are Archbishop Farley, ex-President Cleveland, Gov. Higgins, Mayor McClellan, and many prominent men in music, finance, and the professions in the city.

STOLE TO SEE BALL GAME.

Tommy Murphy, aged 14, of 296 West Tenth Street, stood up as defendant yesterday in the Children's Court, and his father charged that he had climbed to the roof of the building in which is the Murphy flat, had opened the skylight, broken open his father's trunk, and stolen a $45 watch. That was on Friday night when Tommy's father and mother had left him out in the streets while they made a visit.

Tommy had sold the watch, his father said. Magistrate Zeller asked the boy why he had gone to so much trouble to get together a little money. Tommy's explanation, which he thought anybody should understand at once, was, "De game." He didn't get to see the Giants beat Yale. Instead, Magistrate Zeller sent him to the House of Refuge. Tommy expects to get on the team there.

CONTEST ON PEUCHOT WILL.

Widow to Make It—Estate Was Left to Matilda Gatman.

Mrs. Camille Peuchot, whose husband, Martin A. Peuchot, died on the Island of Jersey, has filed notice in the Surrogates' Court that she means to contest the will. The estate was left to "Matilda Gatman, commonly known as Matilda Peuchot." Peuchot declared in his will that he had provided liberally for his family in his lifetime. Mrs. Peuchot and her three daughters live in Paris. Matilda Gatman formerly lived here at the Savoy Hotel, but left there shortly after the death of Peuchot, who was an importer in this city.

Allegations of mental incompetence and undue influence form the basis of the contest.

AID FOR GEORGIA WHITES.

The Industrial School for Poor Southerners Needs Help.

Miss Martha Berry, founder and Director of the Boys' Industrial School at Rome, Ga., is seeking aid in the North for her school. Many persons interested in the education of the poor whites of the South are helping her. The aim of the school is the same as that of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial School, save that it is for the uplifting of the poor whites instead of the negroes.

The school has no endowment fund, and as each white boy is boarded, clothed, taught a trade for $50 a year, the necessity of asking financial aid is obvious.

Mrs. Charlotte Sayre Boorman of this city is interested in the work and is circulating these verses in behalf of the school:

THE LITTLE WHITE BROTHER.

From the mountains of Virginia
And the hills of Tennessee,
From the Northern pines of Georgia,
And the lands near Tuskegee,

From the mountains of Kentucky,
From Lincoln's log cabin home,
My little white brother calls me,
"Come over and help us. Come!"

His father plows and his mother spins,
And he walks ten miles to school,
Which only lasts three months for him—
'Tis the mountain farmer's rule.

His people fought at King's Mountain,
His mother's a "D. A. R."
These quaint Elizabethan folk
Are the sterling stuff "down thar."

His country needs him. Well she knows
What a boy like him may be.
She has seen a Lincoln and Jackson come
From the ranks of such as he.

Make room for hundreds and thousands
In thousands of schools like these!
'Tis the key to the Southern problem—
Give the school flags to the breeze!

There are now 100 poor white boys on the waiting list for entrance to this school, but as the $50 a year charge does not pay half of the expenses of the pupils, it is impossible to take them in until Miss Berry receives money enough to support them all for a year.

PARKS PERPLEX MONTCLAIR.

Jacob Riis Says Town Must Have Them—Vote on Tuesday.

Is Montclair to have parks or not to have parks? That is the question which is now agitating that New Jersey town as nothing has agitated it for a year. There has been a hot fight, and the vote comes the day after to-morrow. It is a question of taxes—and those who don't want the park playgrounds are those who don't want to pay the taxes.

A day or two ago the park faction got a letter from Jacob A. Riis, and it said:

"We expect—the country expects—Montclair to do its duty in this matter, which is to provide both parks and playgrounds for the people, big and little."

That cheered up the park advocates a lot. They predict that the vote will be heavily for the parks.

The Montclair Times was issued twice last week—a most unusual occurrence—and the extra issue was specially for the purpose of urging Montclair to give itself playgrounds. At the top of every column is the advice: "Vote for parks and playgrounds next Tuesday."

The Board of Trade and Taxpayers' Association has been the most active against parks. But through George Da Cunha, the most active member of the board, that body has now consented to the establishment of "playgrounds" as distinct from "parks."

"It has been the practice," said Mr. Da Cunha in an address at a mass meeting, "to impose the cost of improvements on owners of abutting property and not on the town at large. But if these tracts are to be playgrounds, then Montclair should pay for them and transform them, not in the future but at once, so that the boys and girls may have the benefit of them."

NEW EAST SIDE MISSION.

Germania Assembly Rooms Purchased for Methodist Settlement Work.

The old Germania Assembly Rooms, which since the passing of the Schuetzen Bund and the Liedertafel, have ceased to be the important factor in the east side life they once were, will soon resume their old time popularity, but in a new rôle. The halls which once rang with the songs of "Das grosse Vaterland" will soon resound with stirring Methodist hymns.

The New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has purchased the building, and will take title next July. The hall will be used by the Methodists as a settlement, where they will minister to the east side masses along educational, social, and religious lines.

The price paid for the property was $265,000, and it is estimated that it will cost $300,000 more to transform the structure and one adjoining it into a mission. The settlement, when completed, will consist of a number of buildings, to be known as the Wesley Mission Buildings. There will be chapels for several races, and a native pastor in charge of each. There will be the usual social and educational features that generally go with settlement work.

ARCHITECT SUES TOD SLOAN.

Tod Sloan, against whom Henry D. Whipple, an architect, holds a judgment for $4,288, had the jockey up in supplementary proceedings in the Supreme Court, yesterday. The amount represents a balance due on a contract for the erection of a house at Sheepshead Bay several years ago.

Sloan said he was ill and the examination was adjourned for a week, after the defendant had declared that his only income was $50 a week from a billiard room which he runs jointly with John McGraw, the baseball manager. Sloan said he had received $600 for appearing in a vaudeville sketch. Whipple's attorney said that Sloan had no right to spend the money, in view of the fact that the legal papers contained a prohibition against spending his income. Sloan lives at the Hotel Spalding, and pays $90 a month for two rooms.

SUICIDE DUE TO HYSTERIA.

Broker Who Was with Miss Love When She Killed Herself Surrenders.

Miller H. McGucken, the young real estate broker who was wanted by the Coroner in the case of Delphine Love, the girl who jumped from a window in the Sterling Hotel last Friday, gave himself up yesterday. He convinced the police that he was asleep at the time and that he was in no way responsible for the young woman's action, which is now said to have been the result of a temporary attack of hysteria. He was held in $500 bail to appear at the inquest.

McGucken made a frank and complete statement to the Coroner about his relations with the dead women. He said that he had known her for three years under the name of "Mrs. Hume," and that he had never heard her express any intention to kill herself.

"Dorothy and I meant to go out driving on Thursday," he said, "but were unable to get a horse, and went to the Hotel Sterling. There we both drank pretty freely. When I wanted to go home she pleaded with me to stay, and the argument that followed is the row that is spoken of in the papers. Finally I consented to remain and fell into a heavy slumber. The next thing I knew a policeman woke me with a slap in the face and said that she had jumped out of the window."

CHURCH WITH A ROOF GARDEN

Cornerstone of New Edifice Will Be Laid To-day.

Bishop Edward G. Andrews will lay the cornerstone of the Italian Methodist Episcopal Church at 114th Street and First Avenue this afternoon at 3:45 o'clock. The church is established by the Church Extension and Missionary Society, which already has a number of institutions scattered through the poorer districts of the city.

The church will have, among other things, a roof garden. The aim of its founders is to help the poor, and they think that they can do it better by building a sort of church settlement than a steepled edifice. There will be schoolrooms, a library, sewing rooms, and a gymnasium, besides the roof garden.

Among the speakers this afternoon will be Dr. F. Mason North, Dr. J. M. Buckley, Dr. Charles Fagnani, Dr. Klopsch, and other ministers.

The site of the new church is just opposite the Thomas Jefferson Park, and the building will be particularly well situated as to air and light.

KILLED BY CHLORAL.

Hazelton Is Believed to Have Taken an Overdose Accidentally.

Frederick H. Hazelton, 51 years old, a prosperous man, living with his wife and daughter at the Hotel St. Margaret, at 129 and 131 West Forty-seventh Street, died early yesterday morning from an overdose of chloral taken to induce sleep. His wife and daughter and Coroner Harburger, who investigated the case, think he took the overdose unintentionally. Hazelton, his wife, and his daughter, Mrs. Margaret Waterbury, have been living at the St. Margaret since October.

According to his wife, Hazelton had suffered from insomnia for a long time, and had been in the habit of taking doses of chloral, in whisky, to induce sleep. She did not see him take the usual dose last night, but supposes that he did so, and that he accidentally took too much.

Hazelton went to bed about 10 o'clock last night. About 1 o'clock his daughter, Mrs. Waterbury, returned from the theatre. When she passed her father's room she heard him breathing unnaturally. She called her mother, and both tried to arouse Hazelton, but without result. Doctors were summoned, but in an hour the man died without regaining consciousness.

AN UNEXPECTED DROP IN COAL

Escape of Precious Fuel from a Wagon Too Much for a Broker's Nerves.

There was an unexpected drop in coal near the Wall Street district yesterday afternoon. The tailboard of a passing coal wagon jarred loose opposite 111 Broadway, and the coal was distributed along the car tracks.

The driver was for a time unconscious of the state of affairs, and the trolley cars in his wake began to crush the fuel to dust. The sight was too much for the nerves of a broker who was in touch with the coal situation. He rushed excitedly into the street and shouted:

"Don't do that. Don't you know there is a coal strike? We may need that coal."

CITY'S WOMEN TEACHERS DEMAND THE PAY OF MEN

"Equal Pay for Equal Work" Is Their Slogan.

PLAN A CAMPAIGN FOR IT

"Women Lawyers and Doctors Get as Much as Men, Why Not We?" They Argue.

"Equal pay for equal work."

With this as their rallying cry, several hundred women teachers assembled at the College of the City of New York yesterday morning and formed the Women's Teachers' Organization. They chose the following officers: President—Katharine Hogan, Manhattan; Vice President—Anna Goessling, Brooklyn; Secretary—Miss Ennis, Brooklyn; Treasurer—Miss Flaney, Manhattan.

Miss Hogan, who presided over the meeting, explained to the teachers the purpose of the organization by saying that the idea was to obtain for women in the educational system equal pay with the men teachers when they did equal work.

"When this movement started," she said, "it was intended to apply the idea of equal pay to the teachers of the primary grades only. Gradually the idea was extended, so as to include all the women in the system, from Principal down to class teacher. Our proposition is reasonable. It seems that teaching is the only profession in the city which still adheres to the old idea of paying women less than men. Women physicians and women lawyers receive as much as the men. Such should be the condition in our profession."

The members started to ply Miss Hogan with questions. One woman asked if a teacher in the primary department would receive as much as one in a higher class. This started a discussion, which was curtailed by Secretary Ennis, who said:

"Let us drop quibbles. To succeed in this matter it will be well for us to be united. Nevertheless, the fact that a teacher in a high grade receives only a hundred dollars or so more than one in a lower is a serious defect in the Davis law."

One member suggested that each teacher interview the Educational Commissioner in her district and tell him the attitude of the teachers in the matter. In this way, she said, the forty-six Commissioners constituting the Board of Education might be induced to grant the women their wishes. This idea appealed to the teachers, who agreed to put it into operation.

District Superintendent Grace Strachan addressed the teachers and told them not to let petty quibbles cause divisions in their ranks.

The present campaign is due to the fact that under the present salary schedule men class teachers begin at $900 a year and women at $600. This discrimination is carried throughout the system up to the grades of Principal and Superintendent.

AGAIN ATTACKS CONFESSION.

Rev. Dr. Carter Calls Westminster Document Idol of Man's Invention.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel T. Carter of this city, who last year led an unsuccessful attack on the Westminster Confession of Faith in the Presbyterian Church, has sent a letter to the Rev. Dr. William H. Roberts of Philadelphia, to be read at the forthcoming General Assembly, to be held in Des Moines, Iowa, May 17.

Last year, acting on the initiative of Dr. Carter, who vigorously attacked the Confession as being unbelieved by the very men who subscribed to it, the Presbytery of Nassau asked the General Assembly to retire the Confession. The General Assembly voted to retain it.

Dr. Carter, who has been spending the Winter in Italy, writes from Rome. His letter, in part, follows:

> There never was, there is not now, and there never will be, such a God as the God of the Westminster Confession. It is an idol of man's invention as truly as any worshipped in Delhi, Peking, or Africa. I believe the Westminster Confession darkens and denies the great love of God, and should not be retained as a confession by any church to-day; and that our church is false to its greatest duty of being a true witness for God so long as it retains this Confession.

The Rev. Dr. Roberts, to whom the letter is addressed, is Clerk of the General Assembly.

A NEW STAMP SWINDLE.

Brokers Warned Against a Youth Who Trades Bad Stamps for Good Ones.

Warning was sent out yesterday by Inspector McLaughlin's Wall Street bureau against a plausible young man who has successfully swindled at least one brokerage house out of a small sum by a new revenue stamp swindle.

The young man poses as a broker's clerk, and is said to look the part. His game is to enter an office in a great hurry and ask the transfer clerk to trade some one-dollar stock transfer stamps for a number of two-dollar stamps he has with him. After the youth and the good one-dollar stamps have disappeared it is discovered that the stamps left behind have been canceled and washed.

Goslin: Master Thief of Wall Street

Remarkable Career of a Natural Rascal Who After Defying the Law for Years Is Now a Fugitive from Justice.

First Complete Account of the Methods by Which the Most Daring Criminal That Has Ever Invaded the Wall Street District Succeeded in Swindling the Public Out of Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars Without Being Caught---His Escape Just as He Was About to be Nabbed.

Raising money on fake tobacco-warehouse receipts

His profile

He appears harmless retiring self-effacial

In three days discovered a way to beat the cash drawer

LAST week saw Alfred R. Goslin at length a fugitive from justice, named as the master mind in a score of swindles by two of his accomplices, who are pleading that they have been at the same time his dupes. Behind him are the skeletons of hundreds of nefarious schemes, dragged out of their musty hiding places through police raids on his home and offices, and if the indictments under which his bail was forfeited a few days ago are not sufficient to bring him to the gates of Sing Sing once he is caught, numerous others can be obtained easily because of new evidence that has been secured.

So it is reckoned that Goslin is down and out so far as New York is concerned, and it is deemed a good job. Just how good a job it is probably few people appreciate, even among those who have suffered from time to time from his Machiavellian devices, or have known him as the head crook in Wall Street's under-world. All such have wondered at the marvelous ingenuity of the man as various schemes have come to light, and have come to look for his trail in most every dubious enterprise that is under investigation.

What is known about these frauds, however, as an exposition of method, is not to the whole sum of his crookedness as much as a catch-penny machine in a country barber's shop is to a high-class gambling house. Not even the men who have now put him to rout—James F. King, financial investigator and foe of crooks; Barney McConville of the Central Office, and Henry C. Quinby, lawyer—flatter themselves that they have gotten at more than a part of his work. But the three believe that they have uncovered enough to keep Goslin in Sing Sing most of the rest of his life, and the District Attorney's office agrees with them.

It is not intended here to rehearse even in outline all of the known swindles in which Goslin has accumulated a fortune of a half million dollars, for that would fill a good-sized book. But THE TIMES is enabled, from certain first-hand sources of information, to give herewith the true story of Goslin's connection with most of the important schemes that he has engineered in the last ten years, as it appears from the evidence in the possession of the criminal authorities. This will show, perhaps, better than any amount of description would do, why the men who have followed Goslin until they at last brought him to book believe that he is the worst thief and most absolutely wicked man in all his relations that New York has ever had to reckon with as a public menace. There will be also something of the story that Goslin's dupes will tell if he is brought to trial—the men who have been enmeshed in his spider's web and have been drawn further and further into its toils until he owned them soul and body.

But first look at Goslin himself. He is about the most insignificant appearing individual that one could conceive of, suggesting to some a rat and to others a snake, according as the run of imagination may lead. And he appears harmless, retiring, self-effacive. The writer had been reporting a hearing on one occasion, where Goslin was under examination, and happened to get into the same elevator with him. The car was fairly well filled, and Goslin drew himself into an extreme corner of it with an air of apologizing for not having appreciated the discomfort his presence caused and taken the stairs. Afterward it appeared that he was at that time making way with an incriminating document that he had stolen during the hearing from under the eyes of the Commissioner who was taking the testimony.

Goslin is about 5 feet 2 inches in height, and weighs perhaps a hundred and forty pounds. His under jaw recedes so that his upper teeth stick out like those of a rat, and the fuzzy beard that he has worn most of the time for the last few years fails entirely to destroy the resemblance. His watery eyes bulge out in a way that makes more noticeable his low forehead, and altogether he is a loathsome looking person. But he has never minded this, for it has served to make people turn their glances on some one else when he has been around.

He was brought up in Paris, the son of a Frenchwoman who spent a good deal of her time in Canada and was not without position in Montreal. Some say that his father was a Spaniard, and others that he was an Italian, but be this as it may, Goslin received an education abroad that deserved to be turned to better purpose. He got his start in life by chloroforming his mother in their Paris home, stealing several thousand dollars' worth of diamonds that had been the most prized of her family jewels, and skipping to this country. That was in the early nineties, and of course New York offered him the most fruitful scene of operations when it was made sure that his mother, who recovered from her experience, was not going to push the case against him.

By means of letters that he had obtained from family connections in Montreal before he put his get-away scheme into effect, Goslin got certain introductions here, and his ready familiarity with languages and knowledge of European affairs finally gained him a position as tutor in the family of John Brisben Walker, at Irvington. The tutorship led to a clerkship in the office of the publication that Mr. Walker conducted, and it took Goslin just three days, as it afterward turned out, to invent a way of beating the system of checking accounts that was in vogue and begin robbing his employer. He was found out, tried, and sent to the Elmira Reformatory, where he shortly afterward unearthed a good-sized swindle that was being operated through the bookkeeping department in which he was put to work, and earned for this a pardon.

So Goslin came to Manhattan. Of course he kept quiet for a number of years, and operated only in some minor swindling schemes that are hardly worth recounting in view of what has been done since. It was when the sensational raids were made on the stock of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company by means of advertisements signed "Truthfinder" about 1899 that Goslin was dragged out into public gaze. How he was convicted of publishing the advertisements by the testimony of George Romer, an accomplice, is a matter of ancient history, but it will probably be news to some people to learn how Romer got the reward that was offered for the arrest and conviction of the man who did the job.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company had offered $25,000 for this purpose, and a hundred detectives were on the trail. Romer turned on Goslin, and the conviction followed. But with Goslin safely landed on the Island for five months, Romer was but one of many who claimed the responsibility of sending him there. Goslin, who is seldom without news of his friends, sent for Romer, and there in jail made a deal by which he furnished Romer papers necessary to prove his claim, provided Romer split with him whatever reward there was coming. Romer collected $18,000 from the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and Goslin got $9,000 as compensation for his five months in jail, this in addition to what he made by going short of B. R. T. stock during his attack.

It was soon after Goslin got out of jail at this time that he ran across Charles M. Dunn, whose confession has helped a good deal in enabling the criminal authorities to round up their present case. Dunn, a boy of 17 or 18, had got a job in a bucket shop that Goslin operated under the name of Ridley & Piser, at 60 Broadway. The bucket shop, of course, has long gone the way of its kind. Dunn was a prepossessing youngster, and Goslin, after a few months of coaching, had him trained for the outside end of one of the neatest swindles that he ever pulled off.

This was through the Electric Brake and Coupler Company, a concern of more or less imaginary plant, but with a capitalization of $5,000,000—if anybody wanted to buy that amount of stock. It was in 1901, when new companies were appearing on the curb every day, and little was thought of it when Electric Brake and Coupler was smashed up to $40 a share on a limited volume of trading. Dunn meantime had been sent to Milwaukee, Pittsburg, and a number of other cities in the guise of a wealthy young chap who was seeing the country and incidentally doing a little speculating in the market here. He had plenty of money, and found no trouble in opening accounts with "wire" houses in the interior cities. Some little trading he did in standard issues with indifferent results, and then he salted in his orders for Electric Brake and Coupler at $40 a share. The Milwaukee, Pittsburg, and other houses bought through their correspondents here, for whom Goslin's men on the curb were waiting, and when it came time for delivery to Dunn he was gone. The game had worked, and it cleaned up some $50,000 for Goslin, according to the best information, for the expense of printing the Electric Brake and Coupler certificates was very small.

After Dunn came back from his Electric Brake and Coupler trip he was more in the clutches of Goslin than ever. The story Dunn told in his confession as explaining why Goslin made him go to work for the Stock Exchange firm of De Coppett & Doremus and steal a ten-thousand-dollar United States Steel certificate, which Christopher Cosmides, another Goslin tool now awaiting trial, disposed of in Boston, was that Goslin had taken a mortgage on a factory owned by Dunn's uncle in Brooklyn, and made Dunn go into this particular theft as a condition of not foreclosing it. Dunn's confession in this particular may be taken for what it is worth, but it establishes one more mode of Goslin operation—that of direct larceny through an accomplice in a brokerage or banking house.

About a year before this Goslin had come across Cosmides, who has figured in most all his schemes from that time. Cosmides, a young Greek of active mind, heard of Goslin, who was then running, among other things, a money lending establishment at 29 Broadway, and one day undertook to negotiate a loan on a forged tobacco warehouse receipt. Goslin was never fooled by the fake certificate, but he led Cosmides on until he had him safely in his toils. Then he annexed him, and the first work that Cosmides did for Goslin was raising money from various loan sharks on fake tobacco warehouse certificates just like the one that he brought into the office at 29 Broadway. It was by no means the last work, and the reason for the subsequent career of the bright young Greek may perhaps be found in the fact that when the detectives broke open the safe in Goslin's private office, the other day, they found in an inner compartment the original forged warehouse receipt, dated 1900. Cosmides, in the Tombs, wept when Barney McConville showed it to him later.

A longer alliance is that of Bernard Uhren with Goslin. It dates back a matter of ten years, when Goslin first began his work in this town, and has figured in one way or another in nearly every Goslin swindle that has been operated. Uhren has most of the time been Goslin's principal "broker," and it was through him that Goslin, in 1901, got the judgments against the fake firm of C. E. Mackay & Co. that gave him his chance to come in on the spoils of the American Finance and Mortgage Company.

It was supposed at the time of the American Finance and Mortgage Company crash that Goslin was directly implicated in it, but this was never established, and those who knew of the long-standing enmity between Goslin and "Charlie" Weinman, the principal figure in the American Finance and Mortgage Company swindle, have never credited the report, even though it appeared in the bankruptcy case that Henry C. Quinby pushed against the Finance and Mortgage crowd that many of the checks received by the concern in its latter days were deposited to Goslin's account, through the name of "William H. Spencer," and indorsed by Goslin himself in that name.

The American Finance and Mortgage proposition, by the way, had some interesting ramifications, which were more or less fully exposed when the bankruptcy proceedings against the firm of Munroe & Munroe showed the part that the firm of F. P. Ward & Co. had had in the Montreal & Boston stock washery a year ago last Fall. It appeared at that time that one Thomas Henry of Philadelphia was sufficiently closely connected with F. P. Ward & Co. in the Montreal & Boston operations to act as a "messenger" between their offices and those of one of the lawyers in the case. It also appeared that the same Thomas Henry was none other than the "Tom" Henry who in American Finance and Mortgage Company days had written letters recommending the company to prospective victims from his post in the Pennsylvania Legislature and on the official letter paper of that body. This diversion from the direct narrative may perhaps be pardoned as an illustration of how the financial under-world has its ramifications that sometimes come to light in ways that surprise the original operators.

But to return to the American Finance and Mortgage Company and to Goslin. The principal man in the firm of C. E. Mackay & Co. was one Shaffer, now dead, and the conditions under which Goslin had obtained the judgments against him were such that criminal proceedings could easily have been started with Shaffer as their victim. Now Weinman and his friends had taken Shaffer into their camp in such a way that they couldn't afford the exposure, and the result was that when Goslin got his bankruptcy proceedings against Shaffer & Co. well under way through a firm of Brooklyn lawyers, the American Finance and Mortgage "interests" were willing to arrange an adjournment from week to week on condition that Goslin would accept $1,000 every time his lawyer went to the trouble of calling one of these sessions together. And the checks with which the payments were made were those which were subsequently traced through the bank accounts of "William H. Spencer."

This tale of milking the American Finance and Mortgage Company would be lonesome if it were not accompanied by the story of how Goslin got $100,000 from the syndicate operated by "520 Per Cent. Miller." Those were the days of a more or less intimate friendship between Goslin and Col. Bob Ammon, now doing a comfortable sentence in Sing Sing for his connection with the Miller scheme. There came a time when Ammon advised Miller that the syndicate, in order to keep up appearances, must show something that approached a loss, and so Miller gave Ammon $100,000 of the inflowing cash with which to go through the form of an unsuccessful speculation. Ammon sought out Goslin for expert advice, and Goslin knew just the people to do the business.

The "people" were the "brokerage" firm of Seymour Johnson & Co., a Goslin concern that had Wall Street offices, and Ammon left his $100,000 there to cover an account and took a certificate of deposit back to Miller. Finally Miller and Ammon decided that they had better call in the money, and notified Seymour Johnson & Co. that the account was withdrawn. Seymour Johnson & Co. promptly sent over a check for $100,000—it was 4 in the afternoon—and the next morning at 9 o'clock announced their suspension. Goslin got the $100,000.

Of a more personal nature was Goslin's purchase of a seat on the New York Stock Exchange in 1901 or 1902 for a broker no longer connected with that institution. This was an instance where Goslin, with the rare kindness that he appeared to exhibit at times, took care of all the arrangements for the purchase, and advanced the funds necessary to buy the seat, taking a series of notes from the broker of $5,000 each. The notes were paid off in turn, down to the last one, and when it became due the broker went up to Goslin's house in the evening with the little bundle of currency that he thought was going to purchase his release.

It was in the Winter. When the money had been handed over, Goslin sat down with him before an open fire.

"M—," said Goslin, "here's the last of the notes, and let's destroy it forever."

Suiting the action to the word, Goslin crumpled the note and tossed it into the fire, and the two sat there and watched it burn. When the last ember had faded, the men arose and the broker thanked his friend. The next week the broker got a telephone message from Goslin that he had better come and settle his last note.

"Why, I paid you that and we burned it," the broker stammered.

"You —— fool," remarked Goslin over the 'phone, "that was only a forged note that we burned. I've got the original in my safe."

And the broker, not desiring the Governors of the Stock Exchange to find out who negotiated the seat, paid the $5,000 over again.

The connection between Goslin and the same broker has a rather interesting trail into a certain Wall Street National bank that changed hands some months ago after an unsuccessful attempt of Goslin's friend to gain the control of it. But it was this bank that Goslin "did" right properly through Bernard Uhren on a characteristic stock-washing scheme. Uhren had an office at the period in question—shortly after the American Finance and Mortgage Company affair—at 10 Wall Street, and did a business that had considerable appearance of regularity.

Uhren got some letters and went to the bank to open an account with a deposit of $10,000—of Goslin's money. The account seemed a pretty good one and the next step was an arrangement whereby the bank should receive stock offered to Bernard Uhren & Co. up to the amount of $50,000 for the account of the firm and should certify checks given in payment, holding the stock as security. One block of $40,000 Union Pacific convertible fours was received for the Uhren firm in this manner and a good-sized block of United States Steel preferred, both of which were a part of Goslin's personal investments. They were duly taken up by Uhren & Co. and everything was lovely.

Then one day up came a block of $23,750 International Rubber stock, with the usual request that it be received for Bernard Uhren & Co. It was so received, and the bank paid the gentleman who brought it up from where Goslin's brokers were washing it around on the curb the $23,750 called for. Uhren & Co. refused to make good, and the bank was "stuck" with the International Rubber, discovering then, to its sorrow, that the company was a Goslin concern and operated for the purpose to which it had been so effectively put in this case.

Of course the bank threatened suit and exposure. In turn Goslin suggested an action to determine how far the bank had violated the Federal regulations against overcertification. The bank decided it wouldn't sue Goslin or Uhren & Co., and, so far as people have ever heard, it still holds its block of International Rubber stock.

Goslin has ever been on the watch for the unwary broker, whether he be of the Big or Little Board, legitimate or illegitimate, and two swindles that have been worked in the past three years furnish illustration of how the shoe can be made to fit either foot at will. The earlier one of these was the swindle of the Snap Hook and Eye Company, a concern that made an unannounced appearance on the curb one day, had its rise and fall, and now is forgotten, along with a dozen other Goslin curb "properties." This was still in the times when it was an easy matter to wash up prices on the curb—not to say that it has ceased to be such a matter in this more enlightened day—and the stock of the Snap Hook and Eye yielded well to the undertaking.

Soon orders began to appear in Stock Exchange houses from customers—of fairly recent date, to be sure, but whose margined accounts had always looked well, and whose tastes had led them to the less sensational issues. Carefully the orders for Snap Hook and Eye were planted, and just as carefully the price of the stock was advanced on the buying and selling of Goslin's men on the curb, until, when the Stock Exchange firms bought for their customers, it was at good figures, even in those enthusiastic times. As in the case of Dunn's orders in Electric Brake and Coupler, the customers failed to materialize, the stock went to pieces on the curb, and the Stock Exchange houses were "stuck." One of them failed as a result of this Goslin excursion.

Very different in theory was the scheme that Goslin worked on a lot of brokerage firms which everybody knew had been doing a bucket-shop busi-

"An Englishwoman in New York": The Easter Bonnet

A National Joke Leads Our Observant Visitor to Investigations Which Convince Her that the English System of "Allowancing" is Better than the "Common Purse."

DURING the past two or three weeks I have been reading in the papers and hearing among my American acquaintances certain allusions to the purchasing of Easter hats which have been rather puzzling to my British mind.

It has seemed to me that these allusions were meant to be jokes of the well-known American brand of humor—exaggeration. For, according to current reports, business men were at this season going bankrupt and bankers suspending payment, city clerks were committing robberies, and small-salaried men were in despair—all because of the necessity of finding large sums for the buying of their wives' Easter bonnets.

"Why," I said to a New York woman one day, "do the men talk so much about these Easter hats? Do American husbands always buy Easter hats for their wives?"

"Of course," she answered surprisedly. "Who else should buy them?"

"Then it is the custom of American men to present their wives with an Easter hat, just as it is the custom with many clergymen to give their wives all the wedding fees?" I asked.

"Why, no; not precisely. One would hardly call a hat a present. It's clothes."

"To be sure," I said. "But why does the husband make a point of giving his wife money for an Easter hat? Why doesn't she buy the hat out of her own money?"

My American friend answered my question by a question. "Does not the English husband support his wife, buying her hats, dresses, and everything else?"

"He does, of course," I replied; "but she buys her dresses and her hats, including the Easter ones, out of her pin money—that is to say, her allowance."

"What allowance?" asked the American woman.

"The allowance her husband gives her."

"Then, after all, her husband does buy the Easter hat!" she said triumphantly.

"No," I retorted. "She buys it out of the hundred or two or three or four hundred pounds a year he allows her for dress money, and according to the large or small amount of her yearly allowance she gauges the sum she shall pay for hats as well as other things. I assure you we never hear any jokes about Easter hats in England. We all try to have new and pretty hats for Easter, of course, but the husbands haven't got anything to do with the hats, and the fathers haven't got anything to do with them. They are just hats, and we get them ourselves."

This particular little lady has bought the most beautiful creation in New York for her Easter hat. I went with her to buy it, and she left her husband's check at the milliner's to pay for it. She and others tell me that this is the way generous American husbands do, pay their wives' dress bills by check when they come in or hand them out a roll of bills to go shopping with.

"When I ask for ten dollars my husband generally gives me fifteen or twenty," said one wife. "You must not pay any attention to an antediluvian joke you may hear about the husband always demanding to know what became of 'that other fifty cents.'"

"What 'other fifty cents'?" I asked innocently, and then both women with me screamed with merriment. It seems you have two standing matrimonial jokes over here, one about an Easter bonnet and another about a woman who asked her husband to give her a dollar, who, when handing it to her, demanded the whereabouts of a certain half dollar he had given her a week before. Well, I suspect there are some English husbands who would also inquire minutely concerning the expenditure of a half-crown piece, but they would be what we should call "mean" men. There are mean men in every country. But the average English gentleman has nothing to say about his wife's half crowns.

However, it seems that the average American gentleman does have something to do with the expenditure of the fifty cents or the fifty dollars. He does not have to inquire. He is told naturally what is to be done with it or what was done with it. One would think that such tactics would bore him insufferably, with his mind so full of his own more important affairs. The average Englishman never could stand it, and he is not nearly so busy a man as the average American.

It would seem that you have not over here our English method of keeping account of where the household money goes, and that in the average American family our system of "allowancing" is unknown. In England, when a young couple become engaged, one of the first things they do is to talk of the different "allowances." So much is apportioned for the wife's clothes, so much for the husband's, so much for housekeeping, so much for church and charities, so much for holidays and outings, so much to be kept in bank for the rainy day. According to the income of the husband, the different sums are apportioned, although where the young woman has a private income of her own she will frequently undertake to bear the expense of her own clothes after marriage.

I cannot fancy any sensible engaged couple among the better classes of my own country getting married without having first gone rather minutely into arrangements of this sort. As the husband's income increases or as children come, new apportionments are made or the old ones revised. If the income decreases, there is a pulling in of such expenditures as seem best to allow of it.

A very nice custom among us is the giving of "presents" by the husband to the wife over and above the allowance for her yearly wardrobe and pin money. For instance, she would scarcely buy expensive jewelry out of her dress allowance. A great stroke of fortune would bring the wife a present of a bracelet or a necklace, or a trip to Paris, with a dozen silk petticoats and two or three extra gowns that she could not afford to buy out of her allowance.

Each child also is given an allowance. In our well-regulated homes these allowances begin very early. I have a happy recollection of the gradual increase of my "allowance" when I was a little girl. Every few months it would be increased at the rate of a few pennies a month. When I had sixpence a week I felt a veritable millionaire. I was eight years old then. Nobody ever inquired concerning the whereabouts of that money. I spent it as I pleased or hoarded it as I pleased. I had my little extravagances, my little charities, my little fits of stinginess.

I remember as the happiest day of my life up to that time the day when I was called into my father's den and informed that I was old enough to have a dress allowance. In accordance with his means the apportionment was made.

Most of my English friends went through the same experience. I do not remember hearing of any fathers surprised by their daughters' dressmakers' bills. We knew what we could afford to spend on dresses, hats, boots, gloves, cab fares, matinée tickets. To be sure, our fathers also would occasionally or frequently make us presents, sometimes of checks, but it was understood that such things were quite apart from our allowance.

I have looked in vain for any system of this kind in regard to the expenditures of wives and daughters in New York. In a few families it is practiced, but the hit-or-miss plan seems to be the rule in money matters. Noted the world over as the most liberal of men in so far as his womankind is concerned, the American husband and father impresses me as a doler out of money—a very generous doler in many instances, certainly, but yet a doler out, and with all his multiplicity of worries in other directions I cannot but wonder that he has not insisted upon our better English way. That the American wife, too, does not insist upon it is another one of the things that puzzle me. I cannot but think that if she really wanted the system changed she would have it changed, though I occasionally hear the men declaring that the allowance system is all nonsense, and that if they made an allowance the situation would become horribly mixed up. I have been amazed to find a comparatively small number of women here with their own private bank accounts, surprised to find many intelligent American women who never signed a check and would not know how to sign one. I have heard many of them assert that a common purse and a comon bank account are the ideal matrimonial system of handling money matters.

I have noted American fathers being bothered by their sons and their daughters for a few dollars, when it would seem so easy to arrange matters by allowing each son and each daughter a certain income, no matter how small, and I see enmity occasionally between sisters or between sister and brother, because one has been treated more generously than the other.

I do not believe that in England a man could be on the verge of bankruptcy without his family knowing anything about it, while in this country many a wife will give an elaborate dinner party and buy a costly gown one day, and learn with surprise the next that she ought not to have done it. If she says to her husband, "Why didn't you tell me? How could I know you could not afford it?" it is not to be wondered at when one understands the lack of system that prevails in the household management.

I have actually met American girls about to marry who have said in the most offhand way that they did not know what salaries their future husbands were receiving, though they knew, of course, they were able to support them comfortably, or at least they took it for granted that this was true. It occurs to some of them that to inquire concerning the salary or to demand a going over of proposed allowances would be showing a rude curiosity and robbing the situation of all its romance! As for having the slightest allusion made to the probability of bringing children into the world and the ability to provide for them, this they assure me is never done because it would not be "modest," all of which is beyond the comprehension of a matter-of-fact Briton.

"I judge," said an American girl the other day, "that in England when two persons think of getting married they first find out how much money each one has separately and then how much they both have together, and then, after they have spent an evening casting up accounts, they spend the next evening in lovemaking. Now, in this country we should call that a mercenary sort of proceeding."

In a certain sense this American girl may have been right, though with us a mild sort of lovemaking usually precedes the casting up of accounts! How embarrassing to start out with a very violent sort of lovemaking, and then discover the next evening that there is not enough money to get married on or even sufficient to buy the engagement ring. When an Englishwoman receives a proposal she is not so often taken by surprise as is the American woman. The Englishman who expects to propose begins about two weeks beforehand to lead up to the crucial moment. He talks about his family, his brothers, and sisters, tells what he used to do when he was a boy, incidentally mentions the amount of his income. He does all this without being nearly so well acquainted with a woman as an American lover becomes. That is the Englishman's disadvantage, also the Englishwoman's. Your delightful American friendships between men and women would seem to make proposals so easy. It would also seem to make it so easy for money matters to be brought into the conversation. A marriage takes place with the young man and woman knowing so much of each other and yet so little. That smart hat the girl is wearing—did she make it herself at a cost of a few dollars or did she buy it at the most expensive Fifth Avenue millinery establishment? It would do the young man a world of good if he only knew. It might help him to solve the problem of whether to marry or not to marry her.

You may say if it is but an affair of a hat, he had better not marry. But very often happiness or unhappiness, prosperity or bankruptcy, may become but an affair of a hat.

Your country is a land of inconsistencies, and, just as a woman is interesting and fascinating according to her inconsistencies, so is your American inconsistency one of the chief attractions to visitors from over the sea. Your "spoiled wife" has no checkbook, your overworked liberal-handed husband will wonder why his wife needs ready money when he pays all her bills by check and allows her to have accounts at half a dozen shops. He may even send one of his office clerks to his house once a month to straighten out the bills and make out checks for the payment of them. Your American father, sacrificing himself for his daughters, sending them to universities to learn many things that can never be of the slightest use to them, neglects to provide them with an independent little income such as an English father would consider necessary to his own and his daughters' peace of mind both before and after marriage. The portionless bride is very common here, and that being the case, it would seem all the more necessary that her husband should spare her the embarrassment of asking for each dollar as it is needed. True, when she asks for a dollar she may get five, and a loving kiss into the bargain, but I have yet to meet the wife who will admit that she really likes the asking.

On the other hand, many American women seem to think that a fixed allowance from their husbands will put them in the position of paid housekeepers instead of wives sharing and sharing alike. Such a situation could only result where there is a lack of love and understanding, and where that is lacking the position of paid housekeeper is, after all, preferable to the "What did you do with the other fifty cents?" situation.

I have spoken of your many portionless American brides, which reminds me of the hundreds of well-brought-up young women one meets in New York who have nothing in the way of an income to depend upon except the salaries they earn in the various professions they follow. They have very much larger salaries than they could earn at the same occupations in London—very frequently four and five times higher, but if these salaries for any reason ceased, or they were unable to work because of illness, all source of income, even the smallest, would be cut off. Now, in London one usually finds that self-supporting young women of this class have a small income from parents or grandparents sufficient at least to keep them from starving. It may be but forty or fifty pounds a year, the interest on a carefully hoarded thousand pounds, so left at the death of their parents that they will have the income for life, though never allowed to touch the principal.

A thousand pounds! It is such a trifle. Only five thousand dollars, or rather a bit less. The American father, leaving that small amount of money to his daughter, will not be likely to place any restrictions upon the use of the principal. It will appear to him that the interest on it would be altogether too small to take into consideration. The daughter may invest it in a trip to Europe, or merely live on it while it lasts, and for the rest of her life she is dependent upon her own exertions for every penny that comes in. If she marries, she is dependent upon her husband for every paper of pins she buys, whereas the English girl with her little fifty or hundred pounds has a slightly more independent feeling. The husband of the American girl may be far more liberal in the expenditure of money on his wife; he may surround her with whatever he fancies she may need or want; he may pay her dressmaker's bills and buy her seats for the matinée; he will provide her with a wonder of an Easter hat, while the English wife may be wearing one that is somewhat dowdy, and yet it seems to me that the position of the Englishwoman with her little private income and the allowance her husband gives her is in the more independent position. She can give her husband a birthday or a Christmas present without first asking for the money with which to buy it. Out of her housekeeping allowance, too, she may save something by little economies, and what she saves in that way she may add to her stock of pin money. Even with a "mean" husband she has her compensations, for the meanest of English husbands usually makes allowances for the various household expenditures and for clothes.

Now, I am thoroughly convinced that "mean husbands" are in the minority in the United States. The average American husband impresses one as open-handed and open-hearted. If convinced of the superiority of the allowance system, (and I believe most of them would be convinced if they spared the time to think it out logically,) they would doubtless make liberal apportionments according to their means, keeping back for their own cigar and clothing allowance the share that could never be called the lion's.

But if an American woman does have a "mean husband," and she has no allowance, her only weapon of defense seems to be an appeal to her dressmaker to add an occasional extra ten dollars to her bill and to hand it back to her after the cashing of her husband's check.

Tuxedo or Duck Cedar

THE bachelor was dressing for dinner. "I think I shall wear my Tuxedo," he said, laying out his short dinner coat.

"You mean your Duck Cedar," corrected his friend from Orange County, who had just dropped in.

"Certainly. Duck Cedar," repeated the Orange County man. "Sounds queer, doesn't it?"

"Queer? It sounds barbarous."

"It is archaic," admitted the Orange County man. "Nevertheless the Tuxedo coat got its name from the fashionable colony at Tuxedo, and the original name of the place was Duck Cedar. Lots of the old natives still call it Duck Cedar. Mrs. Elizabeth Odell, who died at Greenwood Lake the other day at the ripe age of 94, had repeatedly told me how her grandfather, George Tidabech, who was one of the original settlers of the country, came to name the place. The lake was then much smaller than it is now, and was simply known as the fishpond. One day old Tidabech and his sons had gone there to shoot game. The ducks were very plentiful. Numerous cedar trees were growing out of the rocks along the shore. 'Let us give this place a name,' said the old man. 'Let us call it Duck Cedar.' So Duck Cedar it was and continued to be for many years until the name was changed to Tuxedo."

"All of which may be very interesting," said the bachelor, "but I prefer to wear my Tuxedo this evening. Up in Orange County you may wear your Duck Cedars, if you want to, but not for mine."

Society forgives a man if he breaks the Ten Commandments; but never if he breaks a dinner engagement.

The man who is trying to keep his head above water realizes that a floating debt is a poor life preserver.

Ask a truthful man where the best people of his town are to be found and he will point to the cemetery.

Remarkable Career of Alfred R. Goslin: Master Thief of Wall Street

ness, in the Spring of 1904. There had been out on the curb for a year or more a stock known as "West Virginia Light, Fuel and Power." It was a Goslin flotation in the beginning, and having served its original dubious purpose, he had gathered in all the outstanding stock until he should need it again. The quotations had ranged from $10 to $15 on shares of $100 par. But one day the stock began to move. It jumped up into the twenties, and the curb began to wonder what was "doing." At the same time orders were placed in the firms of Woodend & Co., Floyd, Crawford & Co., E. T. C. Sleese & Co.—then possessor of the famous Carley wire—and A. M. Lamar & Co., to buy Light, Fuel and Power. They bought, but still the price went up, and, as the subsequent failure of all the houses mentioned showed, all yielded to the bucket shopper's temptation to take a profit on the customer's stock before he calls it, and then get in again for him, possibly at a lower price.

This was exactly what Goslin had figured on, and hence, instead of Light Fuel, and Power declining, it continued to rise until it had climbed into the forties, and was said by some of the credulous to be on its way to par. Then Goslin called for the stock that had been ordered in the early twenties, and everybody had to settle—all except Floyd, Crawford & Co., who paid him in some of his own coin by sending him a check at 4 o'clock in the afternoon before they announced their suspension. It is entirely an incidental matter, but perhaps worthy of chronicling, that the collateral put up against these various purchases included the $40,000 of Union Pacific convertible 4 per cent. bonds, and the Steel preferred that went to convince the Wall Street bank of the solidarity of Bernard Uhren's transactions.

It will no doubt be asked how Goslin was caught. The fact is that Goslin caught himself, since for once he undertook, in the case of the Western Gold Mining Company, a few weeks ago, a scheme that could be watched in the process of development and nipped at the moment when things were ripe for an arrest. And here it should be said that Goslin has been pretty quiet of late—that is to say, for a year or more gone by. He has managed some real estate operations that are illustrated by the one in which his dummy palmed off several of the "phony" certificates of deposit of the Hanover Bank in Boston on a Brooklyn woman in exchange for her property, but these have been so worked that they may be traced in detail only through the confessions of Dunn and Charles Augustus Seton, who is now awaiting trial in connection with the Norfolk & Western stock forgery case. Just how far Goslin is involved in that swindle is not known now, beyond the confession of Seton, which charges him with being the master mind in the whole operation. Similarly, Goslin's relations to the Hanover Bank of Boston and its running mate, the Imperial Trustee Company of Jersey City, are still under investigation.

The facts in the Western Gold Mining case, however, are quite well known, because Goslin was carefully watched from the time he first showed his head in the matter. It was James F. King who was responsible for this. King's business makes it necessary for him to follow such concerns as H. Whiteman & Co. of 43 Exchange Place, in which Bernard Uhren was a partner, and it was not long after an engaging "Mr. Griffin" met Werner Fabian, President of the Western Gold Mining Company in Chicago and arranged for an option on 20,000 shares of the stock of that company, that King got word that a "new sucker" had been found for Whiteman & Co.

Goslin was allowed to play his hand out to the end. Through the firm of Whiteman & Co., into which he had steered Fabian, a purchaser was found in the person of a rising young capitalist, who actually was Dunn, for some $29,500 of the Western Gold Mining stock, a part of the block on which "Mr. Griffin" had an option. It was at this point that the word went out to Fabian, who by this time was aware of the whole game, to cancel the option. Dunn, through Charles M. Turnor, another Goslin convenience, got an attachment for $29,500 against the Western Gold Mining Company, and it was when this attachment was vacated in the Supreme Court, on the ground of fraud, that the opportunity arose to arrest Goslin, Dunn, and Uhren. What followed has been told by the papers.

There is one story of Goslin that will long remain in the tradition of financial newspaper and detective work. A few months ago a young clerk got something like $350,000 in securities from the National City Bank through the payment of a loan by a forged check, and the incidental release of the collateral. The undertaking was so simple, yet the manipulation of the check was so skillful, that the police were absolutely at a loss in their hunt for a clue to the perpetrator. On general principles some reporters sought out Goslin and told him how the signature on a certified check on the Hanover National Bank here had been forged, and how the thing had passed without the slightest comment when the deal was pulled off.

"Who made the rubber certification stamp for that check?" asked Goslin, mildly, and when the reporters could not inform him, he looked at them with gentle scorn.

The reporters told the police, and they went looking for all makers of rubber certification stamps until they found the right one, and landed their prisoner. Thus did Goslin, perhaps for the first and last time in his life, aid in the administration of justice.

John S. Wise: Friend of Thirteen Presidents

Distinguished Son of Virginia, Who Has Written a Book of "Recollections," Recalls His Impressions of the Many White House Personalities He Has Known.

CAPT. JOHN S. WISE, of Virginia by birth and New York by adoption, during his lifetime has enjoyed the personal friendship of thirteen Presidents of the United States. His forthcoming book of "Recollections," to be issued by Doubleday, Page & Co. this month, is a review of personalities he has known that have ruled in the White House, beginning with President Tyler. It is full of anecdote and personal observations concerning each Chief Magistrate he has met. Not the least interesting are his impressions of Theodore Roosevelt.

Starting with the proposition that New York is the home of the trading politician, Capt. Wise, in an interview last week, in forecasting the contents of his book, drew a perspective of National politics from the day of the election of Tyler for Vice President up to the present time.

"Tyler was the victim of an incongruous political coalition," said Capt. Wise. "He came to be nominated for Vice President because he was a necessary coefficient in that coalition. Andrew Jackson was a man who could endure no equal near him, and when he discovered that the country was tired of his dominant manner he still had political strength enough to nominate his successor. He selected the weakest, the most obedient satellite he could lay hands on, a New Yorker, a trading politician—Martin Van Buren. Having alienated the support of the respectable, the really strong politicians of his time, Martin Van Buren became the necessary consequence of Jackson's domineering nature.

"The result of this nomination created a political sentiment, known as the Anti-Van Buren Democracy. The political leader of that day was Henry Clay, and the man he had planned to carry out his political intentions in the President's chair was William Henry Harrison.

"Mr. Tyler, who had been Governor of Virginia and served the State in the Senate, was the necessary sweetening of an otherwise suspicious ticket, because Mr. Tyler was a man of great personal purity of convictions, a stanch Democrat, and a man whom Henry Clay would have feared as President, but who served his plans as Vice President.

"There was, therefore, really no deception when Mr. Tyler was chosen as the running mate of Harrison, because the Whigs were in a great majority, and held the reins of political power. Gen. Harrison was an old man when he was elected President, an easy tool in the hands of the Whigs under the leadership of Henry Clay.

"Unfortunately the Whigs were so enthusiastic over their victory that they congratulated poor Harrison to death. He died a month after his inauguration, from too much hand-shaking. Mr. Tyler, to the dismay of the Whigs, became President by an order of Divine will.

"One of his first acts in office was to veto the United States Bank bill, which had been a pet plan of Henry Clay and his associates to get control of the United States Treasury.

"Mr. Tyler's task was a most difficult and stormy one. He was the victim of political conditions that his nature and his temperament deplored, and he will go down into history as more courageous than any other man in public office whom I have known. Of course, I was a small boy when I met Mr. Tyler, and we exchanged no political views, but I have been brought up almost on Tylerism.

"Tyler was an honest Democrat, too honest by far to support Van Burenism. He suffered the penalties of a man who refuses to abandon the convictions of a lifetime. Polk, Taylor, and Fillmore I never met.

"My father, Gov. Wise of Virginia, was Chairman of the Virginia delegation to the convention when Franklin Pierce (who succeeded Fillmore) was elected, and he had a great deal to do with his election, because Mr. Pierce was lifted into office by his Southern supporters. He was the dark horse. The featured candidates were James Buchanan, William L. Marcy, and Stephen A. Douglas. When Mr. Buchanan discovered that his chances were lost he threw the weight of his political strength in favor of Pierce.

"Mr. Pierce was not a man who would ever have set the world on fire. He was always true and loyal, however, to the Southern Democracy that elected him. He was tall, suave, impressive in personality. A man perhaps of the type of Mr. McKinley, but surrounded by much better advisers and political conditions. His administration was clean, quiet, and free from scandal in the main. In those days political strife was of finer fibre than it is to-day.

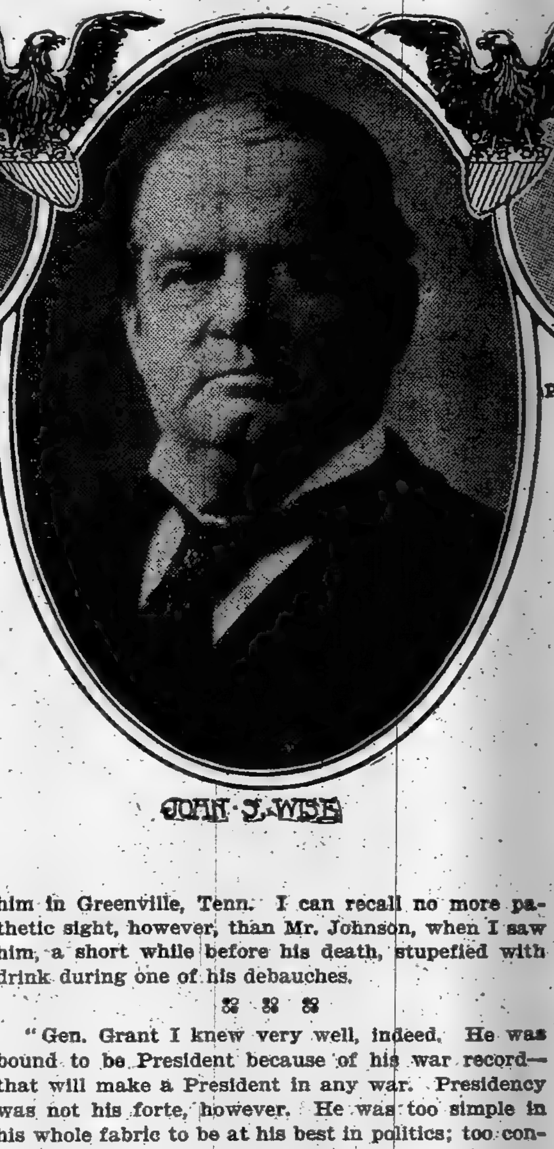
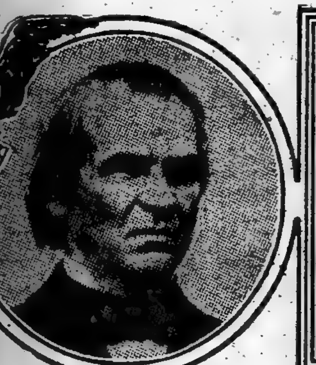
PRESIDENT FRANKLIN PIERCE (1853-57)



JOHN S. WISE



PRESIDENT ANDREW JOHNSON (1865-69)

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN (1857-61)

JEFFERSON DAVIS FIRST AND ONLY PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERACY

"When James Buchanan succeeded Mr. Pierce he was already too old for the times in which he lived. He was up to date, but the date got ahead of him. Next to William Henry Harrison he was the oldest President ever inaugurated. He soon became senile, infirm, purposeless. He was not a man of strong affections or attachments. He was polished, well educated, and his service as Minister to England had given him popular prestige. He was refined and accomplished, an eminent lawyer, and a good public servant. When I knew him he was a man of the type of Senator Allison.

"I never knew Abraham Lincoln. I was obsessed by Mr. Lincoln, but possessed by Jeff Davis.

"I knew Mr. Davis very well. He was a polished orator, and was a brave soldier during his service in the Mexican war, but he was too much of a politician to be a good, unselfish leader of the Confederate movement. He had too many friends, too many enemies. He was a man of great personal ambition, thinking himself capable of everything, and yet a very poor judge of the capacity of others. To the best of his ability Jefferson Davis was loyal and anxious to serve the Confederate cause, but his temperament and his associates were injurious to it in many ways. He was a man of political coteries and private resentments.

"I never could understand the bitter Northern prejudice against Mr. Davis, because he was really no worse than the rest of us. I believe that this feeling of the North against him has been the principal factor in endearing him to Confederate memories. His personality has been forgotten, for Jeff Davis was a singular man, not a popular one.

"Andrew Johnson, the 'white-trash' President, arrived because of his wonderful political sagacity. He was a bundle of prejudices, and he never had a fair chance on this account. He was a man of one class, with a bitter hatred for other classes, for he was illiterate.

"Johnson was a common-looking man, with coarse, strong features and deep lines in his face that traced a cynical and bitter soul. His manners were much better than one would expect, for his first impulse was always to satisfy an inborn grudge against a Southern gentleman. His power over the unwashed of Tennessee was amazing. He secured the Vice Presidency on the ticket with Lincoln by adroitly pressing forward the idea that a Southern support should be on that ticket. It was a sentimental idea, and it succeeded.

"The realization that Johnson was President was as great a blow to the North as the assassination of Lincoln. I saw the best side of Mr. Johnson, for he had a few warm attachments. Among these was my father-in-law, Mr. Douglas, who had been a boy with him in Greenville, Tenn. I can recall no more pathetic sight, however, than Mr. Johnson, when I saw him, a short while before his death, stupefied with drink during one of his debauches.

"Gen. Grant I knew very well, indeed. He was bound to be President because of his war record—that will make a President in any war. Presidency was not his forte, however. He was too simple in his whole fabric to be at his best in politics; too confiding and loyal in his friendships not to be practiced upon in the high position of President. His military record is simple. Its simplicity is its strength.

"Epitomized in three words, Grant's motto was: 'Faithful, constant, fighting.' He knew nothing about politics, less about business, still less about the tricks of his fellow-men. If he did anything wrong he was as innocent of wrongdoing as a child who by faith and its associates is betrayed into a false position.

"Grant was a happy and contented man; a stolid man, not given to high elation or deep depression. He never considered suffering when pressing a military advantage; he never cherished malice, and his magnanimity was as natural as his force.

"Rutherford B. Hayes was a much abler man than he was credited with being. He was a good politician, but the victim of misplaced circumstances. Hayes was not a popular man, because those who made him President did not get as much favor as they expected. He was a very plausible man, sincerely anxious to gain the good opinion of his fellow-men; but he held office as the result of a desperate political game between two sets of utterly unprincipled politicians. His opponent, Samuel J. Tilden, was one of the trickiest men that ever came to the surface in public life, and he was beaten at his own game. Tilden indoctrinated his party with a knowledge of all the tricks with which he himself had tried to win, attributing to Hayes the successful practice of these tricks, and made the world believe it. So studiously was this inculcated that Hayes will probably go down to history clothed in the garments of Samuel J. Tilden.

"I knew Mr. Hayes very well and all his family. His Administration was creditable and respectable, and will be so understood by political students of the future.

"I never knew Mr. Garfield very well. He was the unexpected. There was a great deal of party friction and resentment over his nomination, and a great many people questioned his moral fibre. His Administration was ushered in by a tremendous controversy among the New York Senators, which threatened to lead to a serious breach in the Republican Party. The resignations of Mr. Conkling and Mr. Platt made a powerful sensation, and resulted in terminating Mr. Conkling's career, but, to every one's surprise, Platt came to the surface again, while a really able and powerful Senator was lost in Conkling.

"Many people believe that by the tragic death of Garfield the Republican Party escaped a fatal breach. But Chester A. Arthur was a great peacemaker. He was an adroit politician. Many people believe that if he had been renominated he would have been elected, for Blaine's nomination revived much of the bitterness existing at the time of Garfield's death. Blaine inherited the enmities existing against Garfield with a good crop of his own added thereto. He lost the election to Cleveland by the bitterness aroused in the early stages of the Garfield Administration in New York. In Blaine's defeat Senators Conkling and Platt had their revenge.

"I knew Mr. Arthur very well. He was a charming man, of more polish and worldly experience than any President I had known up to that time. It was his ambition that his Administration should leave a clean record. He was non-partisan with all who came in contact with him.

"Mr. Arthur married a Southern woman, and understood the social and racial questions better than his predecessors. I do not believe that any Republican could then or now make any inroad upon the solidity of the Democratic vote in the South, but Mr. Arthur was more popular there than any other Republican.

"Blaine's brilliancy captivated the South, but they did not believe in him.

"I enjoyed the social life at the White House when Mr. Arthur was in it more than at any other time, because I was in Congress then, and I was a friend and loyal supporter of the President. He kept open house in a charming fashion, and he died partly of a broken heart by the conviction that faithful and valuable services to the party had been ignored.

"I did not meet Mr. Cleveland during his first term, but he went into office under great disadvantage, because he never had a united party at his back; he simply had the opposition to Republicanism. This was made up of heterogeneous elements. Massed against the Republicans it was strong, because it was united in a deep-seated animosity to that party. It was made up of all kinds of people, calling themselves Democrats, and Cleveland was blamed for not being able to drive what 'Ben' Harrison called 'a wild team.'

"Mr. Cleveland is by nature an independent man, but the most subservient politician in the world could not reconcile the discordant elements that elected him first. He was re-elected in great part by the conviction that he had not had a fair show in his first Administration.

"Benjamin Harrison was a man of undoubted ability, with a singularly unfortunate personality. He had what an old countryman of mine described as 'the winningest way of making men hate him' of any man I ever knew. He so antagonized politicians in his own party that his second candidacy was honeycombed with treachery, partly due to his utter lack of diplomacy in dealing with his party leaders.

"I saw a good deal of Mr. Cleveland during this interim between his first and second terms. He is a man to admire and respect in personal relations. Mr. Cleveland undoubtedly has the confidence of the people, of the masses, of this country as no other man of his day possesses it, unless it be Mr. Roosevelt. The tariff issue largely contributed to his defeat when Harrison beat him, and the high protective tariff was more popular at that time than it has ever been before or since.

"William McKinley was looked to by the Republicans to revive the tariff issue. They could not foresee how easy his victory would be made by the fall of the Democracy. The strength of the Democracy had been the faith of the people, and the conservatism of Cleveland. Ignoring this fact altogether, the Democracy threw over all pretence of conservatism, and, captured by the Bryan heresy, started a career of radicalism which, if it had triumphed, would have been miraculous. Bryan succeeded in making all the crazy people of the country crazier, and driving all the sane people into the Republican Party.

"McKinley was hailed as the Moses of National solvency. The money bags of the country were opened for his support, in self-protection, as never before in the history of politics. Mark Hanna saw the fright of the capitalists and promptly tapped their tills as mercilessly as any political gambler who ever played the game. Hanna set the standard of universal political contributions, as a consequence of which many a discredited fiduciary of corporate funds is to-day reaping the bitter aftermath. It is impossible to separate the political memory of McKinley from that of Hanna. McKinley came into being, was elected and re-elected primarily by the influence of Hannaism, which has come to be synonymous with a conscienceless accumulation of vast political funds regardless of their source.

"I liked McKinley. He was by nature a most kindly man of fair intelligence, but without the ability accredited to him at the moment of our wonderful successes with the Spanish war. He had sufficient intelligence, however, to understand perfectly the character of the men who supported him, and who were the means by which his political triumph was gained. He was surrounded by an unscrupulous coterie of politicians, and the alarming decadence in financial morals lately uncovered, notwithstanding our great prosperity, is laid at the door of the politics of McKinley's time. Meanwhile, the men who were the political powers in the days of McKinleyism have absolutely disappeared from public view. Nothing sustained them but the popular personality of McKinley.

"Theodore Roosevelt is his own man in many ways. It is a mistake to say that he is not a good politician. I regard him as one of the shrewdest politicians in the country. He makes many personal appointments, it is true, but he takes care not to appoint any one who is not useful to himself, and is equally careful to give the politicians on whom he depends enough to keep them from kicking over the political traces.

"Mr. Roosevelt has an irrepressible desire to take the personal direction of everything, and is in great political danger of antagonizing those elements without which he will be wrecked. Brilliant as has been his career up to the present, his ultimate fate as a politician is by no means settled yet.

"It looks as though things are tending to-day toward a wide and inevitable breach in the Republican Party on the tariff question, the rate question, and the question of taxing our colonial products as though they were foreign. If that breach comes, the Democrats will enter through it.

"By his nature Mr. Roosevelt will be an active participant in the party conflict. If he is, he will fall, and his present popularity will not save him. We all know how quick is the transition from the topmast to the billows of the political mariner caught in a storm."

George W. Cable Pleads for a More Gentlemanly Style in Aggressive Literature

ACCORDING to the agreeable literary conscience of a master craftsman in the art of literature, like George W. Cable, there is a need of better manners in our literary arraignment of the National moral perception. We need the "gentlemanly writer," as the author of "Old Creole Days" and "Doctor Sevier" expressed it.

He was a bird of passage, spending a day in New York as the guest of a friend, and without definite purpose or personal desire to appear in the arena of public opinion, he yielded gracefully to the inevitable interviewer.

"I do not yield easily to the modern temptation of generalizing," he said, sinking with restful mood into the depths of a big chair, "because I have not looked upon things in my literary life with a scientific inquiry, that is, with broad conclusions arrived at by specific analysis, aiming at pointing a moral or agitating a theory.

"We have passed the stage of satisfaction in theories. We demand experiments, and we try all sorts of things. In that way we learn. I, for instance, don't go to the circus any more; I don't care to attend vaudeville matinées; those are experiments that I never could have overcome by any amount of clever theory. So, no doubt, this spirit of investigation that has crept into our daily life is a grand thing. It is something we ought to have tried long ago."

"In spite of its discouraging revelations?"

"We ought not to be discouraged. It is all in the line of progress. It expresses our endeavor to establish some unanimity of moral perception, although I am one who believes that to be an ability given clearly only to one man in every thousand, or more, perhaps. Still, we live in a most wonderful and luxurious age.

"I was particularly struck with the fact by an advertisement I saw on the elevated railroad, written by some one who was probably not wholly conscious of the tremendous utopian truth expressed. It said that the benefits of the particular article announced were accessible to all, since 'every one reads and every one rides.'

"Just think of that for a moment. 'Every one reads, every one rides,' what a lot we have to be thankful for, how tremendously we have advanced in community interests."

"And in literature?"

"I think so. A great deal more is being written than in any previous age, no doubt, and the accumulation requires sifting, just as the classics are the survival of the fittest of their various times. I myself find little time for reading, because my literary labors are exhausting. I write very slowly, very carefully, and in a little while I need air; then after my walk I am tired; so I have to select what I read very wisely."

"You have found time to read the literature of exposure?"

"Yes, and as I said before, I applaud the spirit of investigation. It has pointed out a condition that would otherwise have remained viciously dormant."

"You think the writer of these articles in magazines is justified in tearing a man's personal and private motives to pieces, based upon the character of his face, for instance?"

"Well, now, of course, you are referring, no doubt, to the attacks on Mr. Rockefeller. Your question suggests an interesting outcome of all this literature of investigation. Specifically, Miss Ida Tarbell had been working a long time to establish her point, and she sweeps along to a glorious conquest, to the triumph of her literary and ethical purpose—then to conclude her work with a dramatic finish she attacks the personal appearance, the very face, of the man. I dare say it seemed to her that clemency at that moment would have been fatal to the ends of justice she was seeking.

"The most delightful quality to me, in certain authors I read, is the intercourse one feels with the sweet, agreeable characters they are themselves. It is like meeting just the sort of man or woman one's mind would most wish to meet, and that one rarely does in every-day life. One looks for form and color, and a certain taste, in any expression of art, and unless these qualities are confirmed in the disposition of a writer, they do not appear in his writings.

"The amenities of the drawing room belong as much in books and pictures as they do in the literal business of everyday household living. All art benefits by their observance. We should respect our parliamentary instincts enough never to forget them in the form and color of our literary and artistic efforts.

"The manner in which some of this investigation literature is conducted I am not in sympathy with at all for the reasons I have named. Among so many investigators one cannot reply upon the moral perceptions of all! Moral perception is something born in one man in a thousand; and all the rest are more or less without it. That is to say, we all have a limited perception of morals, governed entirely by conventional rules, but the moment we are confronted with questions which the conventional code of morals has not yet solved, we are at sea, irretrievably lost as to conduct and purpose. This lack of moral perception is not a crime by intent, and it is a fixing of new situations to the noblest standards, which our modern spirit of inquiry is searching out.

"Lack of moral perception may be in the millionaire as well as in the pauper, and when his accumulated interests reach a point where he is pushed to decide between his obligations to community morals and to himself an adequate moral perception is not there to guide him. Then follows the investigator, of which innumerable numbers have been unleashed in the general hue and cry of the modern chase for ethical standards.

"Then, once in a while, we find a millionaire who has moral perception. One man at least whom you and I know, whose business accumulations have laid him open to the jealousies and entanglements of finance, has never had a word said or written against him, because in all his transactions, in all the intimate details of his life he has had a sound, healthful moral perception of his obligations and his duties.

"I do not have to name him—you know at once who the man to whom I refer is. So in literature and in art there are names which stand at once for safety in moral perception of the problems that are marking the magnificent progress of the world."

"There may be investigators who do not possess this moral perception so necessary to their duties?"

"I think myself it is a rare gift. To attempt to explain where moral perception begins and ends in a man's character creates only more and more confusion.

"He has it, or he has it not, and it safeguards him, or, in absence, wrecks him. It is akin to the divinations of genius, although some years from now we may have the solution of just what moral perception really is, and how it can be secured and harvested. If it shows itself in art, we recognize it at once, and its appeal is universal. In business it no doubt will have its place.

"But these are not questions that should imperil the integrity of men and motives within the given standards of conventions to-day. I would say to the man in literature and art: Keep 'on to your job.' That is one of the most effective commandments in slang I can think of.

"The man who is working away at pictures in his studio is 'on to his job.' You don't hear him barking wildly against invisible enemies with the rest of the pack. He paints, and paints, and goes steadily on with a single purpose, improving his skill as an artist, not trying to improve some one else's skill in morals.

"The man or woman in literature should do the same thing: Stick to literature, improve in it and by it, study all its possibilities and all its labors, so as to be able to write proficiently, truthfully, and with good manners. Always preserve the amenities of the drawing room and your style will be sound, and it will survive."

"You have not contemplated writing upon any of these problems that the investigator has exhumed?"

"No, no, I have not. My literary life has taught me its limitations."

R. A. McCurdy's Private Safe.

AN intimate friend of Richard A. McCurdy, former President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, tells the following story of a small steel safe which the insurance magnate always kept in his private office when head of the Mutual:

"The safe was one in which Mr. McCurdy kept many of his most valuable personal papers, &c. It weighed a little more than fifty pounds, and he had it specially made for him. It was always kept in a secluded corner of his magnificently furnished sanctum and covered over with a piece of green plush. There was nothing exceptionally unusual about the safe itself except in one particular, and that was in the opening of it. That was a secret. One day, however, shortly after the insurance scandal became public, Mr. McCurdy let me into the mystery while I was visiting him in his office. He was about to open the safe to take some papers out of it when he suddenly turned to me and in his impulsive way said as he held out the key: 'I'll give you everything that's in that safe if you open it.' Well, I took the key and inserted it in the lock without any difficulty, but not for the life of me could I open the little steel door. I fumbled with the key in the lock for several minutes, but it was no use. Mr. McCurdy then laughingly took the key from me, calmly inserted its wrong end into the lock, and with a dexterous twist of the wrist the diminutive door swung open.

"Mr. McCurdy seemed to be very proud of his little dodge. On the very day that he resigned from the Mutual he had the safe removed to a safe deposit vault in the city."

Every man to his trade. The bookkeeper can't juggle cannon balls any more than the juggler can balance a set of books.

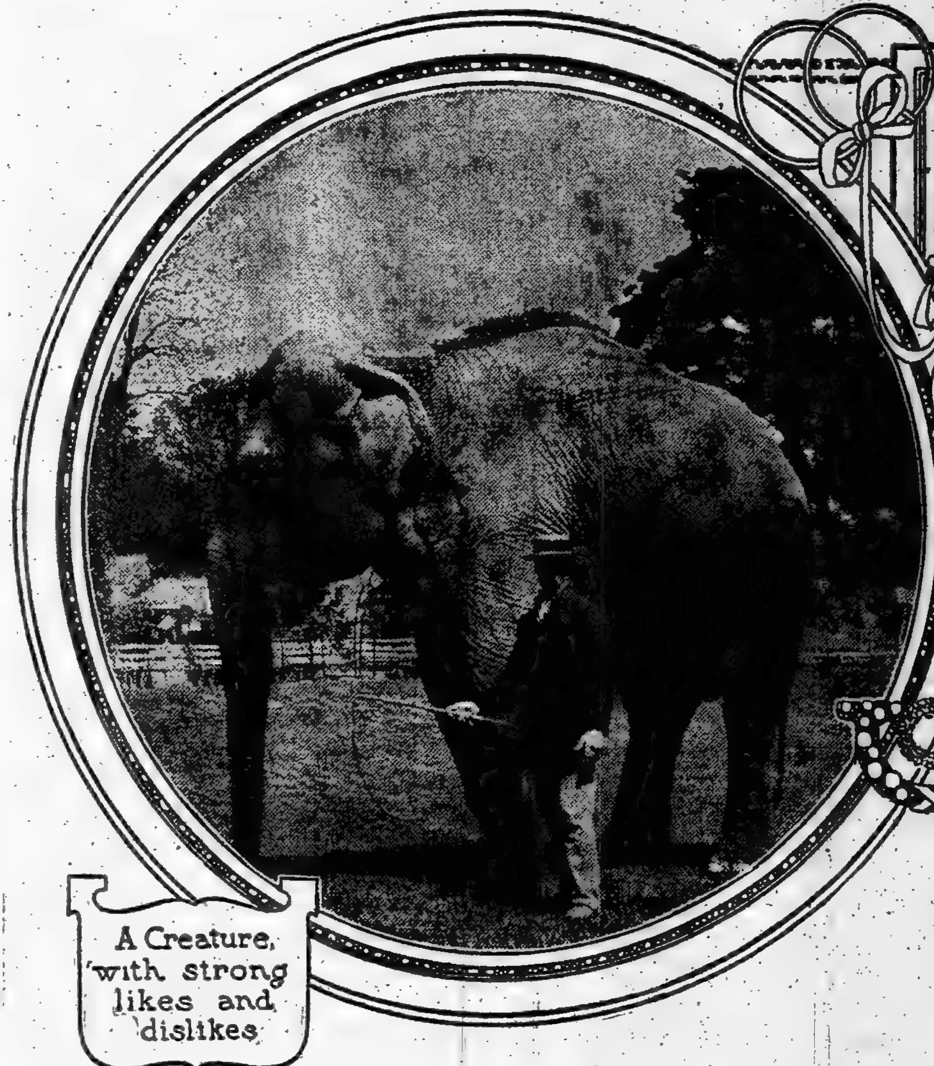
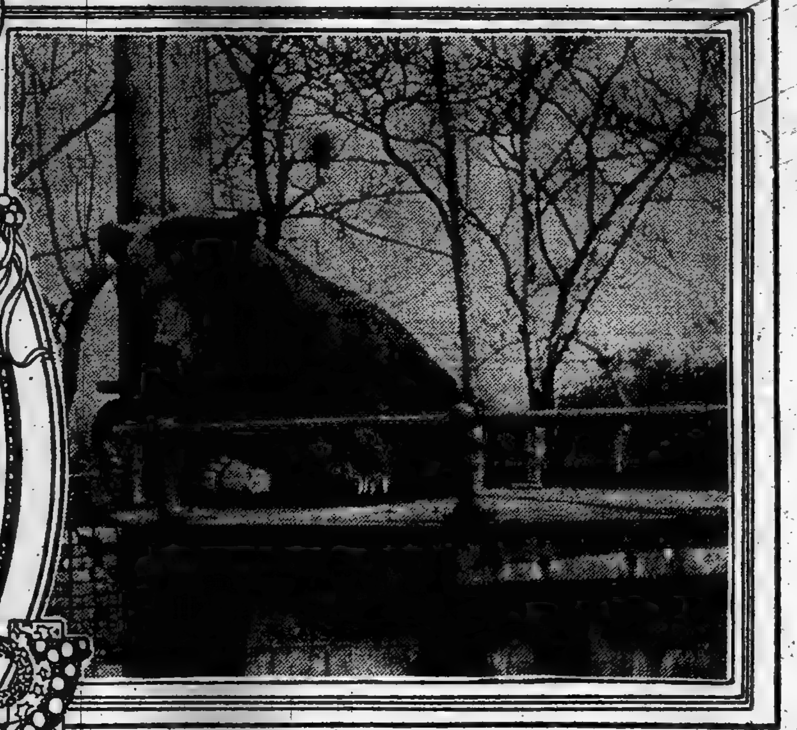
"Animals with Histories": Individualities of the Zoo

Similarities Between Lions and Human Beings---Curious Antipathies Formed by Elephants---The "Trunk-Proud" Pachyderm---Inquiring Mind of the Seal.



A Creature, with strong likes and dislikes



His favorite corner

To those who care to take the trouble to study the subject the individualities of wild animals are an unceasing source of wonder, interest, and surprise.

You may study fifty animals of the same kind—say, lions, tigers, bears, &c.—and you will find that not two of a kind are alike in either temperament or disposition. Take lions, to begin with. I have carefully studied a group of twenty-seven performing lions, and I found a marvelous difference between them.

Lions are peculiarly like men in their dispositions. Quiet, silent men are generally slow to anger, but when they are roused it is a far more serious matter than when a hasty-tempered man gets angry. I remember a lion who demonstrated this same trait very forcibly. He was quiet, slow, phlegmatic, and stupid, to all appearances, and even when flicked with the whip—a rare thing—appeared perfectly indifferent, and remained as stolid and stupid as before.

His trainer was teaching him, or trying to teach him, a new trick one morning, and after many fruitless trials and unlimited patience considered it time to administer a reprimand. The reprimand consisted of a light flick on the nose with the whip, and was a mild one, but the transformation which followed was a surprise to every one.

For, in the twinkling of an eye, the animal's whole nature seemed to wake up. His stolid look disappeared as if by magic, his eyes blazed, his mane bristled, and with tail straight out—one of the worst signs with lions—and muscles tense he gave a roar which shook the building, and sprang straight at the trainer. It was entirely due to the man's agility that he was not killed. As it was, his coat was torn and his arm severely scratched. He got out of the arena quickly, but only just in time.

Once aroused, the lion soon worked all the other lions up to the same state of excitement as himself, and it was with the greatest difficulty they could be quieted in time for the afternoon performance. Meanwhile the hitherto calm, placid animal tore around his cage like a mad creature, and when his rage died down was morose and sulky for weeks.

An abnormally large lion objected to having his head touched, and it was found impossible to punish him in any way. It was a case of "Hands off!" or serious consequences would ensue. Another lion had a curious way of his own in mounting a pedestal. The others would climb slowly up, turn around, and sit down; but this one would first of all smell the pedestal cautiously, think about it a little, turn around twice, and then mount it like the others.

The well-known lion Baltimore, who nearly killed his trainer, Bonavita, two years ago at Coney Island, and was the cause of the latter losing his right arm, is to all appearance a quiet, tractable animal, taking very little notice of what is going on, and doing all his tricks mechanically. But this is nothing but deception on his part. He is actually one of the most crafty and treacherous of lions, and notwithstanding his indifferent manner is on the look-out for any opportunity to get the best of his trainer.

I was present last Summer when Bonavita was photographed with five of his lions, and watched Baltimore carefully. In one pose he was made to rest his two fore feet on the stand, and directly in front of him sat the man whom he had once nearly torn to pieces! It was a terribly risky thing to do, but Baltimore appeared to take no interest until the moment for pressing the bulb of the camera came, and then, just when Bonavita's attention was attracted, Baltimore opened his mouth and deliberately tried to bite his shoulder. This time, also, it was entirely due to the trainer's quickness that the lion did not accomplish his object.

There was one lion at the New York Hippodrome who interested me very much. He was good-tempered and on the best of terms with his trainer, Miss Claire Heliot, at all times, with one exception. Curiously enough this exception was the very time when one would have expected him to be in the best of good humor. It was Miss Heliot's habit to feed her lions herself, and this she did in a unique way. She would take a small piece of meat, and telling each lion to open his mouth would put it inside with her fingers. This particular lion would take the meat, but his rage and viciousness were astonishing to witness. At no other time did he evince the slightest sign of ill-will, and was one of the best performers.

I asked his trainer if he had ever bitten her.

"Oh, no!" she said quietly; "he never bite. Lions very seldom bite; but he scratch me all the time. When he perform he try to scratch me every time I pass him, but it is only play."

Judging by the deep marks she showed me as souvenirs of his "scratches" he did it pretty thoroughly.

There is a lion now in the Zoological Gardens, Clifton, Bristol, England, who, after much trouble, time, and patience, was trained as a circus performer and sent to the Chicago Exhibition. He had never been a willing pupil, but as each animal has its own way of learning—some will learn a trick in a day which will take others weeks and perhaps months—nothing was thought about it. An unwilling pupil has often been known to make the best performer. But when the opening night came Prince suddenly refused to go through his performance. No coaxing, talking, or persuasion had any effect. His obstinacy was unmovable and his decision unmistakable. When every means had been tried to induce him to alter his mind he was finally sold to the Zoological Gardens at Clifton, where he has gained for himself the name of being the most quiet and amiable of lions.

There is a fine female elephant in the Zoological Gardens at Frankfort, Germany, who is devoted to her keeper. The Director, Dr. Seitz, has occasion sometimes to reprimand the keeper for various reasons, and this the elephant appears to resent. She will trumpet at the first words of reproof, and has tried more than once to get at the Director, showing every sign of ill-will and a desire to do him some injury. At all other times she is a quiet, gentle creature, whom the children love dearly.

Another peculiar instance of much the same kind is to be found at the Zoological Gardens in Hamburg. This is a huge male hippopotamus, who is considered a fairly quiet, tractable animal. But here, again, let him see the Director, Dr. Bolan, and he goes nearly wild with rage. There is no reason for this whatever, but no matter how placid the animal may be, the moment Dr. Bolan comes in sight he makes a dash for him, and, there is no doubt, would do him some injury unless prevented.

In the Barnum & Bailey show there is an old elephant who has been there for many years. "Betsy" is still strong and healthy, but either from old age or some other reason her trunk is partially paralyzed, and she is unable to put the tip of it into her mouth. To get the food she first swings her trunk to and fro, holding the wisp of hay or straw tightly meanwhile. When she has obtained a good impetus she will throw the food upward and adroitly catch it in her mouth. One of the keepers one day tried to help her by putting a piece of hay in her mouth, but she promptly put it out again and finally threw it up with her other food. This elephant is the only one in all the large herd at the circus who will not lie down to sleep. She always rests herself against the wall, and remains thus quietly until morning.

Another elephant in the same show is extremely nervous, and when frightened seems unable to get over it. Mr. Moody, the trainer, took all his elephants in to perform one day, but some little thing went wrong, and out went this elephant at a full swing and never stopped until she reached the corner of her stable. It was curious to see how ashamed and guilty she looked when the trainer found her, but the fact remains that ever since that day she has refused to do that particular act, and so his best performance is out of the programme until she either gets over her fright or reconsiders her decision.

Mr. Moody also has that unique animal which is termed in show parlance "trunk proud." This means that on no account must any one touch this elephant's trunk. Even when tempted with peanuts and other delicacies this animal will only condescend to put out the two tips of her trunk with great caution, even then often drawing it back hastily as though afraid of its being touched.

An old grizzly in the Manchester Zoological Gardens has a habit of climbing to a little landing half way up his pole. Putting one paw around the pole, and nestling up close to it, he will stay there for hours at a time. No offers of any kind, however tempting, will induce him to come down, and he seldom alters his position until he gets up to leave the post.

Gazelles are always considered gentle, timid creatures, and the gentlest and most timid of them all is the Dorcas gazelle. And yet there is a Dorcas gazelle in the New York Zoological Park who certainly has a most distinct individuality of his own. For, although only standing about two and a half feet high, he is a thorough villain as regards temper and viciousness. This small creature, who looks so tiny and fragile, has already put three men in the hospital, laying them up for weeks, and quite lately, when resenting some fancied insult, he broke one of his antlers completely off, and is now just as ready and eager to fight as ever! At present, however, he is in the hospital laid up for repairs, which he resents bitterly.

Just outside the Cliff House, in San Francisco, there is to be seen regularly every morning a large full-grown seal, who goes by the familiar name of "Ben Butler." This remarkable seal, or sea lion—for I have this on hearsay only—is so old that when dry his hair becomes white as snow. Not a morning does he miss, and he has a small, admiring crowd every time he appears. Whether he is vicious or not I do not know, as no one yet has ventured too close to him.

There seem to be various opinions as to whether seals or sea lions are vicious or not. I know they are extremely curious and anxious to find out things for themselves, as I have had a personal proof of this. I went to the New York Hippodrome one morning to see how Capt. Woodward trained his sea lions, and had to stand on a wooden box in a corner, while a large piece of scenery was placed across the corner for two reasons.

One was that the sea lions' curiosity would prevent their attending to business while I was looking on, and the second was that these animals bite viciously with their extremely sharp teeth. Everything went well, but in the very middle of a trick one of the big sea lions suddenly left his pedestal and made straight for my corner. It was all done so quickly that the screen was knocked on one side and the sea lion was searching for my feet before I knew what was happening. I protected myself as well as I could by my skirts, and, beyond some damage done to the lining of my long coat, I was none the worse. Twice he did this, but his master explained quietly to me that sea lions often just did a little biting to find out what the object was!

There is a fine old harpy eagle in the National Zoological Park, Washington, who during all the seven years he has been a resident there has never once lost his wonderful composure or self-possession. It is a well-known fact that all bald and golden eagles are easily flustered and alarmed by anything unusual, and get into the greatest state of excitement, often from a very little thing. This eagle, however, is always the same, no matter what happens, and it is an amusing sight to see some of the visitors trying sometimes to arouse it.

I was told of a tiger a short time ago who, it was asserted, always grew restless and excited when a certain tune was played in the show in which he lived. I was very interested, and actually saw him grow restless, and finally get up and walk to and fro when that tune was played. But after thinking about it and studying it a little more I also found that the tune referred to was the last one on the programme, and that when that was over all the animals were fed! This fact spoiled a very pretty and interesting little story, but it is always well to try and find out whether there is not some cause for these little idiosyncrasies of animals. This makes the real facts, when one gets them, all the more valuable.

ELLEN VELVIN, F. Z. S.

Revolutionary Conditions in Russia as Described by a Government Official

In a long letter to I. D. Morrison of the New York bar, written three weeks ago, a most interesting view of the Russian revolution is given from the standpoint of a Government official of progressive tendencies. The writer, who is a personal friend of Mr. Morrison, is employed in the office of one of the most influential members of the present Russian Cabinet. He says:

"The childishly naïve and half-cultured ringleaders, students, and other half-educated agitators ignore entirely the foreign politics of the country, the world history, and the realities of life. They do not see that the very class of workmen they encourage is artificially created by the high tariff, owing to which the people overpay for every nail and screw, getting only rotten products, and that those workmen number only 2,000,000. Those childish dreams about a proletarian republic are eagerly absorbed by these illiterate workmen, to whom is promised a paradise on earth, and who are boasting of heading a movement to free the entire world.

"The students succeeded in inciting the sailors in Kronstadt, who, not having any occupation, (there is no fleet, you know,) and being without any supervision, are constantly drunk and disorderly. The results were startling. The prearranged plan was for the sailors to seize arms and march on St. Petersburg. But these 'heroes of liberty' began by looting the drinking places, became drunk themselves, and pierced the air with shots, plundering everything in sight. When the troops at last appeared half of the sailors were lying drunk in the gutters, and the rest, having previously wasted their ammunition, could not make any resistance.

"The Government could not try the sailors for mutiny, there having been no resistance of any authority, as the officers did not even show themselves, but in civic attire made their escape. Only two officers remained, (Capt. Essen of the Novick and another,) and those the sailors obeyed. So the Government decided to try the seamen for rioting and looting. The revolutionaries at once spread rumors that all the mutineers would be executed, and so only ten days after the first strike succeeded in organizing another one.

"Their demands were: The liberty of the sailors—the 'heroes of liberty'—and the abolition of martial law in Poland. The latter demand was ridiculous, as in Poland the strike terminated the very day when it began here. For instance, the Warsaw-St. Petersburg Railroad stopped running from St. Petersburg to Pskoff, but was running between the latter city and Warsaw. The wretched and unfortunate proletariat! They believed their instigators, by whom they have been treated so cruelly!

"What falsehoods have been employed! The Social Democratic papers are full of lies. Although this second strike ended in a fiasco, these papers continue to proclaim that it was only a preliminary skirmish, planned to test the strength of their organization, and they themselves terminated the strike as soon as their power was ascertained. They claimed to have at their disposal several thousand men, (with nothing to lose.) The revolutionaries gave the command to stop work unless an eight-hour labor day was allowed. As a result, many factories were ruined, and the workmen found themselves on the streets, receiving only a few kopecks daily from the revolutionary committee.

"And who is managing all this? The so-called council of the workmen's deputies, consisting of a few young lawyers, expelled students, writers without reputation—but no workmen. This council issues orders, collects 1 per cent. of the workmen's wages, assuring them that the army will support the revolution, even writing forged letters to the papers of a revolutionary character signed by soldiers. In the same breath, appearing at public meetings in officers' uniforms, they order the killing of those workmen who refuse to strike, (and these are nine-tenths of the whole.) Taking advantage of the inactivity of the authorities, they are terrorizing everybody, considering themselves as a serious provisional Government.

"Protesting against capital punishment, the council itself is executing offenders without investigation or defense. It constitutes itself a censor of those papers which are aware of its evils. Demanding personal liberty, it orders the killing of those who dare to work in time of a strike. From all meetings it drives out orators opposing it. When the conservatives hold a meeting it brings to the hall its rogues to make disturbances. And that they call liberty of speech!

"Finally the Government has awakened. For two weeks the council of the workmen's deputies has been printing and preaching armed rebellion, collecting money even through newspapers—and no arrests or house-searchings took place, until the revolutionaries organized a plot to seize Witte and the whole Ministry and confine them in a fortress, their chief programme being to bring the country to a financial crash. With that end in view the council of the workmen's deputies, as a provisional Government, issued a manifesto. Only then arrests were made, followed by suppression of newspapers and an absolute reaction.

"I have lost faith in my people! Russia a great nation? No, Russia is a thankless nation! The tendency of the revolution has four directions—the constitutional-monarchical, the constitutional-democratic, the revolutionary, and the reactionary. The programme of the first group is lawful order. The constitutional-democratic party is composed partly of latent republicans and partly of federals who dream of making Russia a federation of different States. When this party was first organized I thought I would find in it a place for myself, but after the second meeting I came to the conclusion that this party, the leaders of which are mostly professors, is more unreasonable than the others.

"As stubborn as donkeys, these demagogues remain obdurate in their abstract theories, and insist upon them, not seeing that theirs are eccentric and not live issues, and that their schemes cannot be easily materialized. If the old Government consisted of Cabinet doctrinaires who did not take any account of the wishes of the people, acting upon the theory that the people exist for the Government and not the Government for the people—these other gentlemen are still greater visionaries. Blood is flowing, bankruptcy is threatening, and these gentlemen, holding oratorical tournaments, are having disputes whether to take part in the imperial Douma.

"On the 11th of December was promulgated a popular election law. Every tradesman, tenant, clerk, in general those who pay rental, industrial, or trade taxes, has been granted the electoral right. But when it came to registering openly before the board the public was indifferent, and people had almost to be driven to register by force. This indifference was principally in the large cities. In the rural districts the peasants do not want to hear of anything political, desiring only one thing—land. All this time the constitutional-democratic party keeps on repeating, with parrotlike insistence, 'Equal, universal, direct, and secret ballot.'

"The Poles call these men political romanticists, or fools. The rights of the Russians (entirely in the minority) is something these constitutional-democrats declare should be protected also. But the Poles proceed to tear down even the Russian signs in the stores, and yet to Russia they leave the protection of their lands and their industries, still refusing her the right to demand the general use of the Russian imperial language in official business.

"The country is depressed by the unrest. Armed revolt has been openly advocated and Livonia has actually risen.

"The Treasury is empty, and in the programme of some of the parties is demanded that their candidates to the Douma should pledge themselves not to recognize any Government loans made before the 17th of October, because that money, they claim, has been used for purposes of suppression of the struggle for liberty. But if their cigar cases had been stolen by thieves or by the same revolutionists these demagogues would have complained of the inactivity of the authorities.

"I have dwelt too long on the character of the activities of the constitutional-democrats, whom we call 'cadets' from the initials C. D. The future is very grave. Flightiness, love of quarrel, and nice phrases characterize all our public business, and the noise of oratory we mistake for real work. Poor people without statecraft!

"I have written you that the revolution has been deprived of financial aid, but $3,000,000 was obtained from the millionaire Marosoff, who became infatuated with one of the revolutionary women, and some little money from a few others.

"Witte has shown himself a very ordinary administrator. The public is surprised that the former 'genius' has proved, in fact, not a far-reaching man. They are right who said that the wisdom of Witte was in the head of his friend, the late banker Rothstein, and it is rumored that Witte has parted with the Jews.

"Not having any political convictions, he does not know what to do. Instead of looking to the Government for guidance and general tone, he began by looking for advice elsewhere, seeking it from various disaffected groups, like a giant hampered by his armor. The advice he sought from these groups has been all contradictory. By reason of his political inexperience he thought that by suspending a newspaper advocating bombs and crime he would encroach on the liberty of the press; to arrest an organizer of an armed mob ready to commit murder he feared would be a violation of personal rights.

"Society and the administration, not knowing what Witte wants, have become demoralized and have lost their heads. As, for instance: In Tukeem soldiers have been treacherously murdered, their bodies robbed and mutilated, but Gen. Khorunchrenkoff, to whom the revolutionists after negotiations with their 'parliament' surrendered, set them at liberty, taking away only their arms. Encouraged, the revolutionaries proclaimed themselves a Government.

"In Kharkoff the Douma donated $10,000 to arm the proletariat, and a lawyer proclaimed himself a Governor General. In Tiflis the Viceroy distributed arms among the social-democrats. Nobody knew to which of the two Governments to owe allegiance. In Moscow in the first day of the uprising the revolutionists began to build barricades under the very noses of the troops. Seeing the inactivity of the military and inferring that the latter are on their side, the passers-by helped in the building of the barricades. The news spreading to the whole city, the people took to the work with a will. On that first day the troops were forbidden to shoot. The military were in a rage, but obeyed, although they lost several men and many of the police were killed because they were not allowed to defend themselves. The revolutionaries have lost there a great opportunity by not building barricades in the so-called 'Chinese City,' where the streets are crooked and where there were no troops.

"You will ask what the population has been doing. A few days before the uprising a deputation visited the Czar and petitioned him to be allowed to deal with the threatening revolt and to suppress it with their own strength, but getting the admonition to sit still, the deputation decided to teach the Government a lesson and not to interfere; otherwise the revolutionary mob could be taken prisoners in their own houses."

"The Crime of the Canteen," by Capt. W. E. P. French

"What's them there females howlin' for?" said Files-on-Parade.
"Against our beer, against our beer," the Canteen Sergeant said.
"What is the name of them queer spooks?" said Files-on-Parade.
"Why, they are called 'We'll See To Youse,'" the Canteen Sergeant said.
They have butted in the army, where they didn't ought to go,
For soldiers ain't no water nymphs, as any Ewe might know,
Except a hydropathic Ewe which never had no show
At imbibin' anything but tepid water.

"What makes the rear-rank breathe so 'ard?" said Files-on-Parade.
"He's awful dry, he's awful dry," the Canteen Sergeant said.
"What makes the front-rank man fall down?" said Files-on-Parade.
"The rotten rum in low-down dives," the Canteen Sergeant said.
Ev'ry soldier hates them whimmin of the Female Meddlers' Club—
Why don't they let our booze alone, an' monkey with our grub?
Or better still, just leave us be, an' wrastle with a tub,
'Stead o' makin' us go dry or rush the growler?

"What's that them freaks is guzzlin' of?" said Files-on-Parade.
"Oh! just some fuzzy stomach wash," the Canteen Sergeant said.
"I'm glad they're drinking it, not me," said Files-on-Parade.
"It's strong enough for their weak heads," the Canteen Sergeant said.
We don't give a whoop in hades if the critters drink pink tea;
Nor we don't go interferin' with their "functions," don't you see?
If we did they'd think we're suckers—an' I guess that's what we'd be
If we made them quit their oolong and cream sody.

"What's that they're draggin' into camp?" said Files-on-Parade.
"A drunken soldier from the town," the Canteen Sergeant said.
"What keeps the guardhouse cells so full?" said Files-on-Parade.
"Enlisted men ain't plaster saints," the Canteen Sergeant said.
Six long years of thirst, desertion, death, disease, an' Gord knows all,
Just because them Christmas Temp'rance Ewes is long on gab an' gall;
For they drove us to the ginmill an' the dance an' gamblin' hall
When they took away our harmless glass of lager.

"What's them real ladies askin' for?" said Files-on-Parade.
"To get our chance of Temp'rance back," the Canteen Sergeant said.
"What is their names, their gen'rous names?" said Files-on-Parade.
"The Woman's Army 'n' Navy League," the Canteen Sergeant said.
You can bet they know what they're about, an' what the soldiers need;
They ain't no cantin' hypocrites—Gord bless 'em, an' good speed!
Here's the A. N. L. forever! May their enemies be "deed"!
May they down the Canteen Killers in the army.

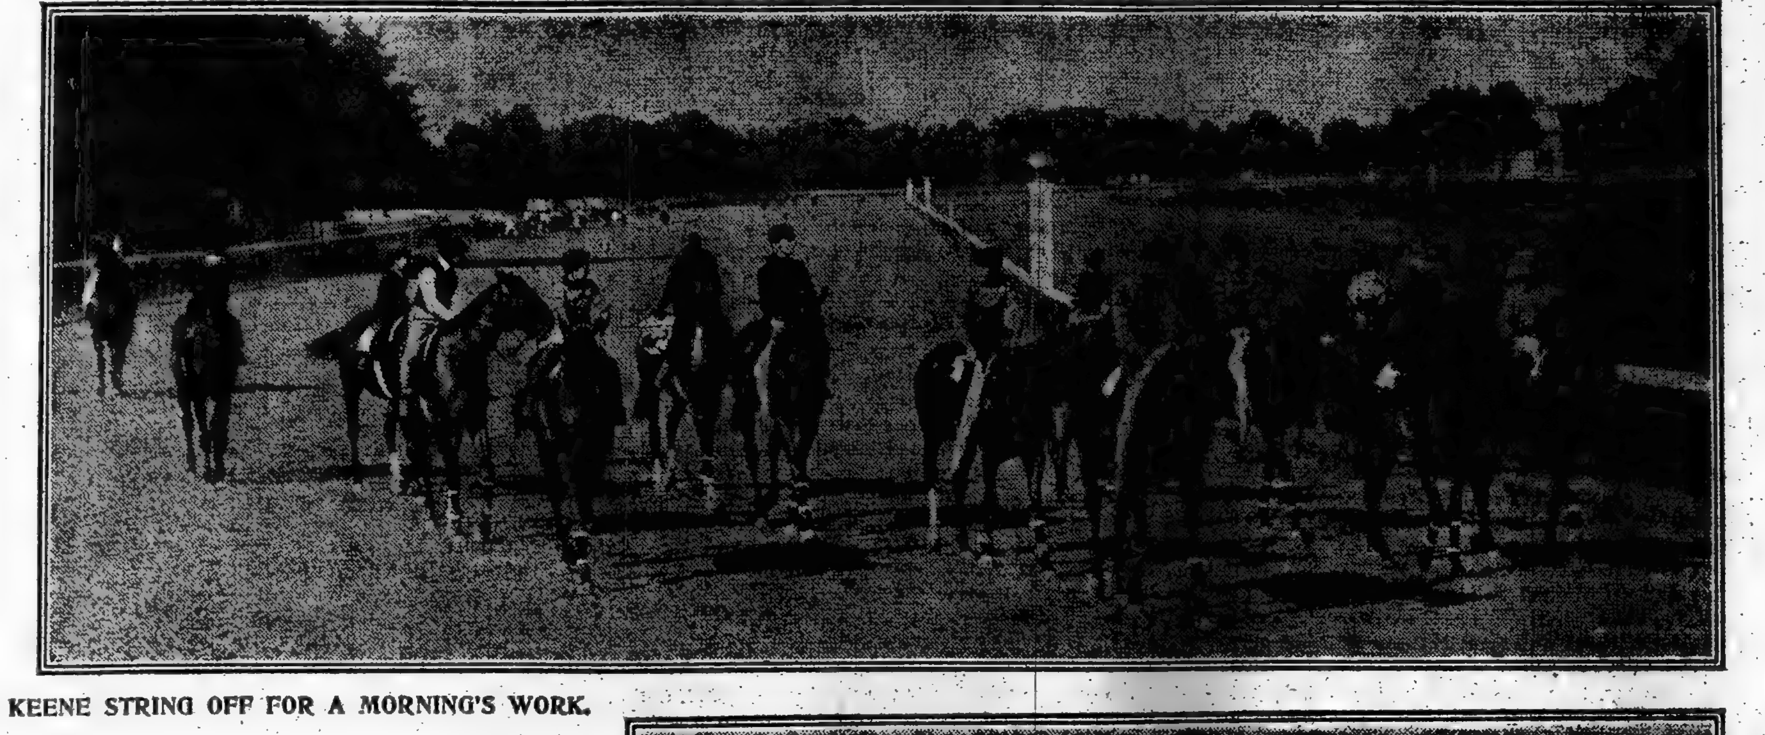
Preparing Thoroughbreds for the Racing Season

Tuning Up the Stars of the Turf and the Two-Year-Olds for the Opening at Aqueduct Next Week---Busy Mornings These for the Trainers and Stable Boys.



KEENE STRING OFF FOR A MORNING'S WORK.

PART OF THE WHITNEY STRING WORKING OUT.

WHETHER its betting adjunct is to be really sterilized, as the Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Slicer has announced, or whether it is to be merely subdued, the real racing season in the East will open with the running of the Carter Handicap at Aqueduct on April 16, one week from to-morrow.

The meeting at Benning has been successful and well attended, and, considering the class of horses engaged, the racing has been good, but the Eastern season is never really opened until the bugler calls the horses to the post for the first race at Aqueduct. At Aqueduct the race follower comes out of his Winter quarters in the lobby of the Hoffman House or from such other Broadway retreats as he has selected for purposes of hibernation, shakes himself, rubs his eyes, and looks about him. No longer is he dependent for his entertainment specialty upon the telegraphed dispatches from the South or upon the reminiscences of himself and his friends. Now he sees them run with his own eyes, and if he wins he sees it done, and if he loses he thinks he knows why. Sometimes, too, he really does know.

But, though the last few months have been sleepy ones to the "regulars" who go to the tracks every day during the season, and to whom the raceless Winters seem interminable, they have been busy ones to the men who make the racing. They have been full of business ever since the day the two-year-olds arrived from the South and West.

The two-year-old string is every Spring a "hazard of new fortunes." Any one of the graceful, slender youngsters may turn out a champion of champions. Not one of the lot but some trainer has his hopes about him. They have seen so many a highly bred and highly tried colt fail at the test of a real race, while some awkward, rollicking fellow of whom little was hoped went on and made a world-wide reputation for himself, that they have all become Missourians. They take nothing for granted—conformation, breeding, trials, and all the rest may induce them to hope, but not to be sure. The colts and fillies must show them in the races.

Meanwhile they spare no pains and no skill to make the most of their material. The trainers have been working like busy bees at both Gravesend and Sheepshead Bay for weeks. The chill gray of every late Winter and early Spring morning has seen them astir and marshaling their strings out for morning exercise. Their eyes are all on the days for declarations from the big races, for the horses that "come to hand" late must be weeded out of the early calculations, and sometimes it is not easy to tell whether a certain thoroughbred will be ready for a given race. Some of them are so deceptive that a trainer may work diligently with him for a month without any apparent results, and then, just as he seems hopeless, will suddenly grow "fine" almost while one looks at him.

With the old campaigners, the veterans of two or three seasons of racing, the trainer is comparatively safe. He knows almost to a day how long it will take him to get these fellows fit. He knows that such a colt will be ready for the earliest of the big races, while that big chestnut filly, in the next box stall there, will have to stand weeks more of grilling before she is ready to do credit to the skill of her trainer and the colors of her owner.

With the two-year-olds it is different. They are the trials of the trainer's life. But, like the naughty children, they are often the best-loved of the family. They have all the charm of the unknown. They are as whimsical as the wind, but in their charming moods they make the heart of the trainer expand until he feels that life is really worth living.

But if the trainer works hard with his charges, and no one can deny that he does, the thoroughbreds themselves are not loafers. There is a popular notion that the thoroughbred is a pampered animal, coddled and done up in cotton batting and in general shielded from all the ills to which other horseflesh is heir. There really isn't much in this idea.

It may be true, to a certain extent, of the thoroughbred that has been retired to the stud after a long and honorable career between the barrier and the judges' stand, but the racer in training attends to business from early Spring until late Autumn.

It is a fact, of course, that he is most carefully watched and tended—not always, it is feared, from wholly disinterested motives. He represents a considerable investment of money for the owner or breeder and of reputation for the trainer. He must be made to yield as large a return on that investment as possible. And the captains of race-track finance don't water their stock more than is necessary.

Wherefore it is that the thoroughbred's stall is spotlessly clean and absolutely dry, his stable is comfortable and tight against all the winds that blow, while his health is the daily concern of all who come in contact with him. Small wonder it is, too, for a cold contracted at the wrong time may mean the loss of thousands of dollars.

Every racer of consequence has his own individual caretaker or rubber, who watches him with all the shrewdness and solicitude that a trained nurse expends upon a patient. Some of these rubbers even carry their watchfulness so far as to sleep in the stalls with their special charges. They are with them, at all events, from the first crack of dawn until, the day's work done and the evening meal eaten, the stable is locked for the night.

But they make the racers pay for all these attentions. At 6 o'clock any morning this week the stables at Gravesend and Sheepshead Bay will be at their busiest. Then the rubbers will blanket and saddle the horses and all the members of the string in training will be led to the track, and, under the eye of the trainer himself, will get the chief drilling of the day. All this on empty stomachs, if you please. Not a horse will get his morning meal until he has earned it.

All of them perform under blankets in the early hours, with stable boys in the saddle. Some of them are merely jogged easily about the track a few times. Others get smart little gallops of from three to six furlongs, and still others are sent a mile or a mile and a half "in hand," which is the race track term to indicate that the horse is not allowed to do his best, no matter how ambitious he may be.

But some two or three days before the running of some big handicap in which a horse is entered and it is a different story. Roseben, for example, who will probably be the favorite when the field in the Carter Handicap goes to the post, will get a surprise some day late this week. After days and days of early morning jogging, with occasionally a burst of six furlongs at good speed, under which his ambitious soul has fretted because that nuisance of a boy on his back would not let him do his best, one morning they will strip him of his blanket and perhaps place on his back a real jockey instead of a stable boy, give him the best sprinter in the stable, lightly weighted, to run against, and turn him loose. Roseben will not know why. He will only know that at last he can really stretch those muscles of steel and hurl that contemptible track behind him as fast as he likes.

That is his trial for the Carter Handicap. And Roseben will wonder, perhaps, why it is that the next morning at 6 o'clock he is back under that depressing blanket again with that strong-handed stable boy on his back once more and his ambition checked and thwarted every time he tries to run. But on the Monday following, at about 3:45 o'clock, there will be no stable boy on his back and no hated blanket. Roseben's day will have come. He may run as fast as he will. His jockey will even help him, if he can. His owner and trainer won't care if he actually flies.

But Roseben and all the rest of them have just had the finest training season that any Northern Winter has afforded in many years. There have been mighty few days the whole Winter long when there was much frost in the ground, and for the last six weeks, barring one or two days when snow was on the turf, it has been ideal training weather. In consequence, the season will open on April 16 with the fittest lot of thoroughbreds in years. The trainers have no excuse for unreadiness, for not only has the training season been ideal, but all the stables have been unusually free from sickness.

It was not so long ago that the thoroughbreds that Wintered in the North suffered so much from the climate that the wisdom of trying to keep any of them north of Mason and Dixon's Line during the cold months seemed doubtful. Every trainer remembers with a shiver the unfortunate Winter when influenza devastated the Whitney stable at Westbury. Scarcely a horse in the stable escaped a touch of the dread disease, which seldom leaves its victim without a blemish, and frequently ruins a thoroughbred for racing.

In this particular case influenza cost Mr. Whitney dear. Yankee, the Futurity winner, and Blue Girl, greatest of two-year-old fillies of her time, were both smitten, as well as Goldsmith, probably the gamest son that Meddler ever sent to the races. All three recovered, and went to the races again, but neither Blue Girl nor Yankee was ever quite the same, and Goldsmith degnerated into a selling plater.

Almost every stable that sheltered thoroughbreds in the North that Winter had some victims of influenza or pneumonia, and the "touched in the wind" list was long that Spring.

But this year it's a different story. There is scarcely an equine cough in all Sheepshead Bay or Gravesend, and the early horses were never so fit in their lives. Wherefore, the racegoers of New York have every right to expect that the races of the early season at Aqueduct and Jamaica will be much better worth seeing than usual. Aqueduct this year is under the management of the veteran Philip J. Dwyer, and the track is said by experts to be in its best condition.

Every man who loves a great horse will rejoice to know that the Winter has dealt kindly with Sysonby. This unbeaten son of Melton has grown into as fine a specimen of the thoroughbred as was ever seen in this country. He has just turned four years old and is 16 hands high. He is so evenly proportioned and well-balanced and has such scope in his conformation that a novice would be more than likely to pick him as the highest-class performer of the Keene stable, where are so many others of the first class. Moreover, when in action Sysonby is, as the English say, "all liberty," displaying a frictionless movement that enables him to go to the front at the beginning of a race and chop his opponents to pieces for speed.

Sysonby is this Spring, as last year, an exception to all the great racers on the American turf in that it is just as unknown to his trainer as to the public what is his best distance. He is taking daily exercise, and is galloped with the Keene string at Sheepshead Bay every morning. It is likely that he will be allowed his own time to come to hand without any attempt being made to force him, but he is such a willing performer that his development is likely to surprise people.

The great colt is top weight in all the big handicaps, but his handicap is not regarded as excessive for a horse of his character, and in England or France it is likely that he would carry 140 pounds, and be thought well in at that. His stable makes no secret of the fact that he is expected to have one of the busiest and most successful seasons ever put to the record of a thoroughbred in this or any other country.

Of the other great racers of last season, Artful has Wintered well in the Whitney stable. The great filly is still at Aiken and will not be brought North until it is pretty nearly time for her to make her début for the season. Burgomaster, the crack two-year-old of last season, has grown into an enormous three-year-old, and will be considered a factor in any race in which he starts.

The two-year-olds are here in a small army. The Haggin lot, including the get of Watercolor, the famous "picture horse," and of Ben Holladay and the other famous Haggin stallion, are quartered at Sheepshead Bay, and if looks count for anything they will be heard from in most of the classics.

The Keene stable never had so many "good-lookers" in the two-year-old division as this year. All of them were bred at Castleton, in Lexington, under the watchful eye of Major Daingerfield, and if they don't win many races for the polka dots it will be strange indeed. Perhaps the pick of this year's lot are the colts and fillies by Disguise, who, as every racing man knows, is by the famous Domino.

The Belmont two-year-olds are for the most part by Hastings, St. Blaze, and Henry of Navarre. They are expected to uphold the reputation of the famous stable of the Chairman of the Jockey Club. Trainer Rogers is still perfecting the education of the Whitney two-year-olds at Aiken, and there are reported to be some stars in the lot.

But what the two-year-old will do is seldom known until he does it. All the same, the maxim, "blood will tell," is at its strongest in the case of the thoroughbred.

Just what it will tell will appear in the weeks following the first great shout of "They're off!" at Aqueduct.

Levantines Driving the Negro Out of Business in the Gulf States

THE negro in his natural state is a nomad, and the first notable result of his emancipation is complete reversion to the nomadic habit. This habit is not conducive to steady work or continuous attention to business, and as the average negro lacks these characteristics, he is being rapidly supplanted in many callings which seemed to be his own by right of inheritance.

A negro bootblack is now rarely seen in the South, except in a negro barber's shop. The regular stands, set up and managed just as they are in New York, are conducted by Italians and Greeks, and the proprietors make money. In a little while you see them buying property and branching out in other business. Restaurants and lunch counters, fruit and confectionery stands and stores, the growing of garden truck, and the handling of all sorts of perishable food supplies are practically controlled now in many of the Southern cities by the Levantines, who are flocking to the South in swarms.

The secret of their advent is not far to seek: They have found out within the last few years that the American South offers to the immigrant from Southern Europe all of the advantages and none of the drawbacks of their own countries. They are sober, energetic, and hardy people who see at a glance where a public service is required, and set about performing it efficiently and at a reasonable price. They supply initiative and continuity in about the proportion in which the negro lacks these qualities. They are good at any calling they take hold of, and quickly enter into the spirit of the community in which they locate.

As wageworkers these people are rapidly taking the place of negroes on the sugar, cotton, and rice plantations, and in some of the iron furnaces and manufacturing plants. They will work steadily for six days a week, and the higher their wages are the more persistent they become in putting in full time in order to save up their earnings for investment. The negro laborer, on the other hand, works on the opposite theory. If he can live a week on what he can earn in three days, why should he work four?

There are still large numbers of good and faithful colored people, both men and women, in all the Southern States, but their number is diminishing so rapidly that in many of the larger cities efforts are now on foot to obtain white help in the homes, and in many other avocations which the blacks might have held without competition had they been so minded.

With $225,000,000 of capital invested in cotton mills, not one of the mills has negroes as operatives. They were found to lack attention, and to cause much loss by their carelessness. A manufacturer of cast-iron pipe at Birmingham, Ala., hired several negroes who had been trained in the foundry at Booker Washington's school. They were good workmen, but quickly dropped out because they had decided to become doctors or preachers.

Birmingham, with its suburbs, now has a population of nearly 200,000, and is growing by leaps and bounds. A large number of steady workmen is needed there at the present time by all the big industrial plants and in miscellaneous employments. Many of the Italians and Hungarians who are arriving in the country go into this work, but the Greeks, Syrians, and some other Levantines prefer not to work for wages, but seek business openings which give scope for their trading and bartering instincts. The population of Birmingham has grown so fast that even the industry and enterprise of these new people have not been able to keep pace with the demand for foodstuffs. Taken for the year through, fully 95 per cent. of all the foodstuffs consumed there by human beings and animals are brought in from other States. Yet cheap lands are near at hand on which these supplies could be readily grown, and it seems incredible that the negroes have not taken hold of the trucking business and made fortunes out of its profits. The Greeks who have gone into it have become independent in a few years.

Levantine immigrants are now being landed at New Orleans and Galveston direct from the Mediterranean ports in steamship loads. On the arrival of each ship there is lively competition on the part of employers of labor in Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Alabama to secure the services of these people, and each cargo of human freight is, figuratively, gobbled up before it reaches the wharf. Some of them go to work for wages in various public works; some go as hired hands on the plantations, while others still become tenants to farm on shares, and a small minority buy land and start out at once on their own hook. In each pursuit they show themselves equal to the situation, and make steady and pronounced headway. The next year they are joined by relatives and friends from the old country, and so it goes on from year to year, the tide of newcomers increasing as correct information about the real advantages of the country, the climate, and the soil is spread abroad among the people.

Even from the port of New York some of the Latins are making for the South as soon as they arrive, and the aggregate of arrivals is beginning to tell on the general character and institutions of the Gulf section. These people become an important factor wherever they settle down, and it is very clear from the points of vantage they are pre-empting that they have some pretty definite ideas on the important part their race is going to play in that region in the time to come.

One does not need to strain the imagination very much to realize that, with the Panama Canal an accomplished fact, the Gulf will rapidly become the greatest highway of maritime commerce in the world. There will be no other part of the globe where steamships can be coaled so cheaply as on the shores of Alabama, where the coal can be brought direct from the mines in barges which can discharge their cargoes into the bunkers of the thousands of merchantmen which will halt there for their fuel. The Government improvements on the Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers are already completed to the southern edge of the Warrior coal field, and by the time the Panama Canal is completed these rivers will be open to navigation from Mobile Bay to within a few miles of the City of Birmingham.

From present appearances the population of Birmingham by that time will be at least 600,000, and fully nine-tenths of the labor employed in the great iron and steel industries there will be white. The fisheries of the Gulf will be rapidly built up by the expert fishermen from the Levant, and most of the activities of the Gulf zone will be in their hands. A new Mediterranean, with a vast polyglot population on its north shore, almost a counterpart of that of Southern Europe, will have been established there, and that region will become to the modern world largely what the Mediterranean was to the ancient world.

This is no far-fetched speculation, but the logical and inevitable result of conditions. The native American can scarcely be figured on in connection with this development, for the simple reason that there is not enough of him "to go 'round." Besides this, it will take an acclimated and hardy race, like these Levantines, to perform the tasks which will be necessary—men who are inured to hard manual labor and who glory in it. The greatest docks in the world will have to be built there, and, naturally, the greatest shipyards will be established where all the metal and fuel for the construction of a merchant marine or ships of war can be produced and laid down at a lower price than any other point on the globe can match.

I sometimes doubt, when the full magnitude of these coming changes presents itself, that the American element in the life down there in fifty years from now will be sufficiently strong to bring into it very much of the American character. Inside of fifty years the entire Gulf Coast will probably be at least as much European in its character as New York is to-day, though the South has heretofore been the banner region of the Republic for genuine American blood.

The ultimate effect of this immigration on the labor problem of the South can be already foreseen. The departure of the negroes for the North is increasing at a great rate. The evidence of his being here in ever-increasing numbers is very plain to any observant person who goes through the Northern cities after an absence of two or three years. The percentages of increase in negro population shown in the last census for Indiana and Illinois, New York and Pennsylvania, are interesting reading for students of our sociology; but they will be tame when compared with figures on the same subject in the next census. A few years back there was scarcely a negro cabman to be seen in New York or other cities north of Baltimore and Washington. Now they appear to be on every other box. They are seen riding on nearly every street car; they are chopping tickets on the Subway and elevated roads, and are in evidence at every turn—and nine out of ten of them are mulattoes of some degree.

The "negro problem" is rapidly leaving the South and moving North, and with the shifting to higher latitudes the ultimate fate of the negro race on this continent is sealed by natural causes. He obtains more money than he is accustomed to, and can give the natural bent of his nature a freer rein. He rapidly develops in this environment such forms as Hannah Elias and Spriggs, which are more significant on account of what they stand for than because of what they actually do. A monster like Spriggs could not exist a moment in the South, but he has plied his trade here for years—pandering to one of the most vicious and dangerous cravings of his race, and has become, in that unspeakable career, a "reputable" capitalist and politician!

It is—not to laugh—but to weep!

Devices to Catch the "Shopper."

THAT shopping is done in uptown residence streets, and that, too, within the doors of private dwellings, will surprise those who do not keep a sharp eye on the advertising pages of some of the newspapers and do not, occasionally, follow up some of them. It's an odd development of the genuine sacrifice that has to be made now and then by some family in straitened circumstances. An advertisement something like this will be inserted in the paper that is regarded as most likely to bring returns:

Such an advertisement will arouse the instincts of the shopper in any woman, whether she be long or short on furs. But when she calls she will find, in nine cases out of ten, the "lady" to be a dapper young man who has entirely forgotten the fact that the furs are to be disposed of in order to defray the expenses of an "invalid sister" on a Southern trip. He has furs to sell. He will show more sets than he has fingers, and will prove himself to be possessed of all the persuasive eloquence of a first-class salesman. Although he is located in a private dwelling, utterly devoid of outside advertising signs, he opens up a miniature fur store for the inspection of his caller.

Many is the excuse that has led to these so-called "forced sales." For instance:

"Society lady going into mourning has no further use for magnificent set of Isabella fox."

A woman might hesitate to go into this house of mourning, especially as all appearances at the number given in the advertisement indicate that it is really a private residence. But if the sympathies are sufficiently stifled the shopper will find that a businesslike air pervades the place, and another dapper young man is there to be of service. In many respects the verisimilitude is retained. There are no store counters, no cash girls, no floorwalkers, no piled up heaps of garments. There may—or may not—be a "magnificent set of Isabella fox" on exhibition. In some cases the special article or articles advertised will be conspicuously draped over an armchair. But if the articles displayed in the room don't suit, the drawers of a high chiffonier are thrown open and dozens of different sets of furs may be inspected.

Nothing is sold at any of these places except at a "sacrifice," as instance this advertisement:

"Handsome furs taken in payment of bill must be sacrificed for cash at once. All in perfect condition."

Such is the apparent exclusiveness of the street that the uninitiated is likely to think she must have the wrong address. But no. Each advertisement means a fur store in disguise, and if the shopper does not see what she wants, it can be ordered.

Another curious feature of these so-called "private sales" is that two or three addresses in practically the same neighborhood are often given. In fact, it is quite surprising to see how easily these advertisements may be grouped—sometimes two or three in a single block with an extra one thrown in "just 'round the corner." But the initiated know that this is part of the game, and that there is, in reality, only one of these fur-selling places on the block, although three advertisements may be put in. The mode of procedure is like this: A person calling at one of these places will be referred to the "house just across the street." Again, whoever opens the door of the second house will say: "Oh, yes, the lady has just stepped into the house two doors from this and you can see her there."

In this unusual manner the shopper is often directed from one place to another and the friendly interest shown would seem to indicate that they knew all about the inside workings of the business, though the shopper didn't.

HE WAS INSANE.

A REPRESENTATIVE on the Democratic side of the House enjoys nothing better than to recount a story which, he declares, he had from an official in the Pension Bureau.

One day, so the tale runs, the bureau was in receipt of an extraordinary communication from the West, in which the writer, among other things, made this astounding statement:

"I am now drawing a pension of $25 a month. Recently the Lord has prospered me; so, being convinced that I am not entitled of right to this money, I desire that my name be stricken off the roll."

As soon as the bureau recovered in a measure from this staggering intelligence, an investigation was set on foot. The examiner in the field reported as follows:

"I have the honor to inform you that the person who desired that the name be stricken from the pension roll is now in an insane asylum in this place, and has been for some time."

Earthquake May Ingulf all Europe, Says German Scientist

Berlin Professor Finds in French Mine Disaster a Symptom of the Approaching Cataclysm---American Geologists Not Quite So Alarmist in Their Views.

THE people of Europe have scarcely recovered from the shock caused by the catastrophe at Courrières, France, when news comes from Germany to the effect that the Director of the Berlin Observatory finds, by meteorological and other investigations, that the terrible mine disaster was connected with peculiar atmospheric conditions existing at the present time throughout Europe, and that, as a result, the whole crust of the earth in the Eastern Hemisphere is threatened with cataclysmic changes that may involve the destruction of entire continents.

Such disasters as the one that happened at Courrières, predicts this German astronomer, may be expected to occur again in the near future in any part of the ill-fated Eastern Hemisphere, and all kinds of dire forebodings are naturally being indulged in by our European cousins as a consequence of the impending ruin.

In the history of mining in Europe there has been no disaster showing such startling features and marked by such wholesale fatalities as this one occurring in France about a month ago. The Courrières mines are in the midst of the great coal fields of Northern France, and are very extensive. The explosion took place early in the morning immediately after the men had gone down into the pits, where, at a depth of over 700 feet, they were entombed alive. The story gains its romantic feature from the fact that twenty days after the accident thirteen of the victims were rescued, long after any thought of finding them had been abandoned by their friends, and five days after that still another victim was taken out alive.

Judging from the descriptions cabled to this country, however, the disaster, terrible though it was in all its details, does not appear to the average reader to have been due to anything more phenomenal than an explosion of fire damp, which, as the output of these mines is said to be particularly combustible, is not extraordinary. As usually happens in such accidents, there was a deafening explosion, cages and mining apparatus were hurled high in the air from the mouth of the mine, men and horses standing near by were either stunned or killed, roofs of adjacent buildings were blown off, flames burst from the various mining shafts, and the atmosphere, becoming intensely rarefied and filled with poisonous vapors, prevented all attempts at a rescue of the 1,200 men who were known to be imprisoned in the submerged depths below. In all of this, as related in the press dispatches, necessarily incomplete as to scientific details, there does not appear to be anything to indicate the presence of the strange phenomena upon which the Berlin astronomer bases his sensational predictions.

"It is difficult to see," said Prof. J. F. Kemp of the Department of Geology in Columbia University, discussing the subject with a TIMES reporter yesterday, "judging by the data that has reached us, why the Director of the Berlin University should take such a gloomy view of the fate of Europe as a result of the Courrières mine disaster. Scientists in this country, so far as I know, are unaware of any impending catastrophe, due to existing meteorological or geographical conditions, threatening the welfare of our European friends. The Berlin authority quoted in the papers, however, does appear to intimate that not only his country but the whole Eastern Hemisphere is in danger just now from active natural causes of a startling nature, the commencement of whose disastrous work was shown in the mine explosion at Courrières. It is impossible, of course, for a scientist who would be true to his calling to express an adequate opinion on a subject about which we have so little information at present as this. Not knowing the facts upon which the Berlin authority is working, I can neither affirm nor deny the validity of his conclusions. But I can assure you that there is nothing in the wind or the sea or the earth, for that matter, that threatens the American Continent just at present, so far as science can determine anything, whatever may be confronting Europe.

"If this prediction of the Berlin astronomer is to be believed, Europe is in an uncomfortable position to say the least! Of course, he may be wrongly quoted—it is to be hoped so, for the sake of all concerned—and again he may be in possession of facts, derived from his own observations, to which the rest of us have not as yet had access and which will be seen to bear out his calamitous predictions as soon as he makes them public. In the meantime we can merely surmise what the possible meteorological situation is in the East that has given the professor such alarm. Thus, as a hypothetical explanation of his statements, it is possible that at the time of the Courrières explosion an extremely low barometric pressure prevailed which might affect the gases in the earth and might even cause upheavals and depressions of its surface. Mind you this is simply a surmise offered to account for the professor's apparent theory. Outside of that I have no facts myself to make such a hypothesis tenable. Until I heard of this report from Berlin I had concluded, quite naturally, it seems to me, that the Courrières disaster was simply an explosion of fire damp, on a large scale, due to any one of the variety of causes that unfortunately always exist in a soft coal mine. Without being more certain as to the facts I hardly like to say that the ventilating apparatus in the Courrières mine was out of order, or that there was a defective lamp among those carried by the miners. Those are the usual causes for such explosions as this one in France appears to have been—but evidently, judging from this Berlin dispatch, there is the possibility of something out of the ordinary involved in the factors that produced this terrible disaster.

"As for the 'dangerous condition of the crust of the earth in the Eastern Hemisphere,' the geological data at hand in this country tells us nothing. Again I am forced to a conjectural interpretation of what may be happening, according to this Berlin theory, to the Continent of Europe. Thus, an extraordinary variation in atmospheric pressure may be accelerating the changes of the earth's crust in the Eastern Hemisphere. You may not be aware that these changes are already taking place and are to be classed among our normal physical phenomena. This we know from actual observation. Thus, in Norway, near the coast, there is a famous case of land upheaval shown by a tunnel driven right through a rocky headland, rising at a considerable distance above the sea, which was hollowed out by the action of the ocean waves at some period when this headland was on a level with the sea—a proof that at this point the earth's crust has been forced upward to a considerable altitude, and this in very recent times, estimating, of course, by the slow chronology of geology. Elsewhere on the Norwegian coast you can see the remains of shellfish, and other unmistakable sea growths, clinging to the cliffs that rise to-day far above the sea level that they occupied in what you may call a geologic yesterday.

"All this is proof that the European Continent is undergoing a change, an upheaval above the surface of the sea in some parts, a subsidence in others. That is a fact that has long been known to scientists, and calls to mind the legendary basis for the theory. You remember the 'Lyonesse' of English literature, the mythical southern portion of the island of Great Britain that was supposed by the old poets and romancers to have been swallowed up by the waves? That was formerly taken as a pure poetic fiction—but the scientist of to-day, interpreting the various evidences of geological action on the British shore line, is inclined to corroborate the old legend, there being good reason to think that a considerable portion of the ancient English coast has fallen into the sea. We have, also, Prof. Haeckel's hypothetical sunken continent, Lemuria, in the Indian Ocean. Then, of course, there is the persistent legend, dating back of Plato, of the 'Lost Atlantis.'

"What basis of fact is there in this tradition of the disappearance of a whole continent under the waves—a catastrophe that is apparently intimated as among the possibilities that threatens Europe at the present time by this Berlin prophet? You should consult Ignatius Donnelly's work for whatever corroboration there is of this famous legend of history in the discoveries of science. Donnelly brought together many queer facts and coincidences to support his theory of the former existence of the continent of Atlantis. I don't remember just where in the ocean area between this continent and Europe Atlantis was supposed to lie, according to his hypothesis. It certainly could not have been in the deep sea area. Taken as a whole, there is this corroborative fact in favor of the theory, a fact whose importance is generally recognized by the scientists of to-day: there is an undoubted relationship between the animals and plants that are found in this country and Europe that points to a land connection in some dim prehistoric past between the two continents. The theory of the 'Lost Atlantis,' from this aspect, fills in a gap in the speculations of science, and is quite in the realm of the possible. Supposing that there was such a continent, and that it was swallowed up by the waves, as Donnelly and the romancers declare, we are led to surmise, from the cabled report of his prediction, that the Director of the Berlin Observatory thinks the same fate is possibly impending over Europe to-day. If his predictions are to be accepted as having weight, how are we to suppose the direful catastrophe that will sweep Europe off the face of the earth will take place?

"It is inconceivable that anything of so widespread a character could happen with the cataclysmic suddenness of a mine explosion. The interrelations of sea and land, as I have said, are always undergoing change. In some places the land is rising, in others it is subsiding and the sea is taking its place. Many theories have been advanced to explain this physical instability of the earth's surface, but a perfectly satisfactory explanation is yet to be found. One thing, however, seems to be certain, according to the present attitude of science: these changes, from whatever cause they spring, are gradual, extending over untold ages, and not cataclysmic. If there was an Atlantean continent, as Donnelly says, it did not sink into the ocean in a day; ages must have elapsed from the time when the movement of subsidence was initiated until the last spire and mountain top of this forgotten continent vanished beneath the waves—and if a similar fate awaits the Continent of Europe I imagine that it will come with a like rate of speed, and that for many generations our European cousins will be spared the watery form of existence imagined in Parry's romance 'The Scarlet Empire.'

"Really, I can't help thinking, all reports from Berlin to the contrary, that the continents of the Eastern Hemisphere are at present and for a long time to come on a pretty solid foundation! As for the relation of the Courrières mine disaster to an approaching cataclysm of the stupendous proportions indicated in the dispatches, I cannot reconcile such a supposition with the known facts in the case. It is quite probable that the extent of the loss of human life recorded in this mine explosion may have had something to do with an exaggeration of the scientific meaning of the occurrence itself. It is not often, fortunately, that there are over 1,200 victims in a mine explosion. Then, to add to the interest naturally arising from such an event, the rescue of those fourteen miners after an entombment of twenty and twenty-five days is phenomenal, and not to be equaled in the history of mining, I think, except in the interesting case recorded by Prof. Geikie in his 'Geologic Sketches'—a case well worth recalling just now.

"The collier of whom Geikie writes was imprisoned in a mine in the Scotch coalfields at Kilgrammie in 1835. John Brown was the man's name. He ventured into the mine at a time when it was declared dangerous. The roof caved in and buried him many fathoms under the ground, where he lay in utter seclusion and without a particle of food for twenty-three days. For a part of this time he had a little water. When he was rescued he was quite conscious and entirely rational and calm. But his entire body was covered, as though it were a decaying log of wood, with a fungus growth that is found in coal mines, and he was so thin that one could feel his spine through his abdomen. He was 66 years old and lived three days after his rescue. But so strong an impression did his experience have on his comrades that the latter declared that his ghost revisited the scenes of his adventure for a long time afterward—in fact, until the parish put up a tombstone definitely stating that Brown was dead. The miners rescued from the Courrières mine were twenty days underground. One was entombed twenty-five days. It is reported that they had horseflesh, bark, hay, and even a few carrots upon which to sustain themselves, the fourteenth had a collection of lunch tins to draw from—sumptuous fare compared with the table of poor John Brown!"

When Prof. E. O. Hovey of the Department of Geology of the Museum of Natural History was seen in regard to the prediction of the Berlin astronomer, he expressed surprise that the Courrières disaster should be considered as indicating anything beyond an ordinary mine explosion.

"I have seen nothing in the newspaper accounts of the disaster," he said, "that leads me to think it was more than an explosion of fire damp, such as we have in soft coal regions where proper precautions are not taken as to ventilation or where defective lamps are used. There are two kinds of damp, you know, 'fire' damp and 'choke' damp. Choke damp is carbonic acid gas, which cannot be breathed, while fire damp is carbureted hydrogen, or 'marsh' gas, which, mixed with a certain proportion of air, explodes. A defective safety lamp will also cause an explosion of fire damp—and that is what one is led to believe happened in the Courrières mine. From a French textbook of geology I find that this particular mine is rated among those having the highest percentage of volatile matter, which is one of the factors adding to the liability of explosions. In an anthracite mine there is very little danger from fire damp.

"Of course, taking into account the reported statement of the Berlin astronomer, a low atmospheric pressure might have existed at the time the explosion occurred at Courrières. That might have increased the tendency to a sudden ignition of the air when it came in contact with a defective lamp, especially if the ventilation in the mine was not what it should be. But how this low atmospheric condition could be sufficiently widespread or intense to affect the crust of the Eastern Continent is difficult to conceive without more data at hand than we have at present.

"It is entirely conceivable, however, that parts of a continent may disappear, as seems to be the supposition involved in this prediction in regard to Europe. Some parts of our own coast are known to be sinking, as the coast of New Jersey, for instance. Hudson Bay, on the other hand, is supposed to have risen considerably in geologic time. The whole Niagara Falls region is also rising, and at such a rate that it is entirely in the realm of scientific probability that, sooner or later, measuring, of course, by geological ages, Chicago will be dumped into Lake Michigan.

"These changes in the earth's surface are not volcanic in the main, although sometimes we have cataclysmic and volcanic action working together and producing startling changes in the earth's surface. The forces of nature, of course, are always liable to acceleration in their action. It is difficult to say just what is the influence in any one instance—and that is what makes this prediction of the German astronomer so interesting and, until we have the facts upon which his theory is based, so incredible." Novel Bureau That Will Make an Organized Hunt for Municipal "Grafters"

AMONG the innumerable good fairies who have recently been waving wands of moral purpose over the wicked heads of municipal, National, and State officials is a young man who since Jan. 1 has been in charge of the "Bureau of City Betterment" of the Citizens' Union of New York.

He is a sociologist. Industrial problems have been his passion since he was 18. His name is Henry Breuere, and he is a friend of J. G. Phelps Stokes and Robert Hunter and Jane Addams.

I mention these names especially because they seem to identify the quality and spirit of the chief of this new departure of the Citizens' Union.

He looks very young, but so was David when he went forth to meet Goliath, with the clear eye and steady aim of youth.

There has been no time yet for the tribes that govern New York City to realize just what this young man may accomplish, to trace the course of his progress, to trail him, as it were, to ultimate results. The Citizens' Union itself even is not quite certain about his final purpose. R. Fulton Cutting, who is the President of the organization, though unwilling to assume the distinction of having conceived this Bureau of City Betterment, is nevertheless the author, incognito, of its plot and passion. At any rate, the chief of this new and latest investigating agent in municipal matters is doing his personal share in the general eruption of committees these days without any apparent political banner.

He was born in Missouri, he told me; was graduated from the University of Chicago; practiced law among the poorer classes of the stock yards, and, being a sociological student, he became active in industrial problems in Chicago, where he organized one of the largest non-union workingman's clubs, which he left because the firm employing its members decided to conduct its affairs themselves, rather than allow the men to do it.

He built himself a little house near the Chicago stock yards, furnished it as an exhibit of an economic problem, and lived in it to test certain sociological theories of his own.

Then he spent three years in Boston to perfect himself in law. In Boston he must have lost his Missouri birthright, for he talks with a distinctly Bostonese accent, and he looks like a young Harvard student.

But he is more mature than he looks, for he told me, in cold blood, that he desired to avoid personal publicity in his connection with the Bureau of City Betterment, because he felt that his youth would prejudice people against him in his present discretionary duties. Any really young man who can so alienate his personal conceit is going to be severely honest in all his transactions.

If young Mr. Breuere were a New Yorker he would perhaps be more aggressive than he is, but he comes to New York as an observer of its municipal problems, more in sympathy with his duties because of their sociological aspect than because of their obligation to discover individual instances of graft.

"Graft is everywhere; it is an intangible demon in human nature," he said with a tolerant, amiable smile.

"Then your bureau is not pursuing the municipal grafter?" I asked.

"Not directly. I can scarcely tell what may turn up indirectly, as the result of certain investigations this bureau is planning."

One could see plainly that Mr. Breuere was going to do nothing radically unusual.

Whatever his plans, they were to be conducted on conservative lines. No shirt-sleeve enthusiasm; no violent agitation of stagnant officialdom; just a cold, clear-cut, persistent policy of investigation for the benefit of the citizen curious to know what his rights might be.

HENRY BREUERE

The Bureau of City Betterment is to be as moderate as its title, a broadly sympathetic agent of investigation, from which the municipal official might profit also, because of the sociology he would acquire.

At least, such is the preliminary spirit in which this new sociological David approaches that old political monster, the Goliath of municipal graft.

Mr. Breuere explained first of all the conception of this bureau.

"The Citizens' Union, as I understand it, has been a fluctuating inflence in municipal ideals. The membership is free, demanding of its members merely allegiance to the principles of good government in city affairs, irrespective of party interests. Necessarily at election time it favors certain results at the polls. Obviously enough it seeks the election of men that its ideals indorse. It becomes a political influence in the same regard to a campaign that the unprejudiced citizen feels for his own comfort and safety. This attitude of the Citizens' Union has not changed in the slightest, I believe, except that some of its prominent members, who voluntarily contribute to the office expenses of its chosen work, felt that it had been a potential power long enough—that it was time to pursue its ideals in some more active form than heretofore. So the Bureau of City Betterment was organized, with a view to enable the citizen to understand his rights as a taxpayer and property holder, and to assist the heads of city departments to realize the needs of the citizen and the obligations of his office. Of course, the success of our efforts in this bureau required the co-operation of the newspapers in securing publicity for our endeavors, and so far our expectations in this regard have been successful."

"Exposure is part of your plan?" I said.

"Exposure is scarcely the world. It conveys only a small part of the motives of this bureau, because frequently the result of our investigation comes in the light of valuable information to the head of some city department. You see, we are not agitators here: we merely wish to co-operate with the municipal Government in bringing about a better ideal state of civic law. We demand efficient service of public officials, honesty of purpose and action, and to advance improvements in the mass of detail that entangles the office business of the various city departments."

"You are the heralds of Utopia?"

"Say rather the agents of an ideal citizenship," said Mr. Breuere.

"The opportunity to bring about these conditions pleases you," I said, noting the eagerness of his expression, the grim faith of the reformer in his face.

"It is a great chance. I have always been keen about such things. I have been a student of sociology since I was 18, so that in many ways I am perhaps ready for this sort of work. I believe in an idea."

"And you are not afraid of political tangles for the Bureau of City Betterment."

"You mean graft. Well, there are men so constituted that they cannot help stealing, and then there are men so constituted that they cannot help being honest. It is a world of temptations, and character is most important. Of course, I came to New York without any prejudices. I am almost a stranger to its personal tangles. I think that New York is fifty years ahead of Chicago in its municipal appliances, but Chicago is fifty years ahead of New York in its application of democracy to city government. There is everything of the best material to make an ideal city here, but the management of this material seems to me to be far behind the ideals that exist in Chicago. Out there there is the enlightenment of the true democratic spirit which is lacking here. There are certain duties incumbent upon the City Government under the laws of the city charter that are neither clear to the citizen for whose benefit they exist nor to the city official who is in office to enforce them. We are at present about to issue a little book explaining these misunderstandings, setting forth briefly and tersely the relations that should exist to bring about an ideal municipality."

Mr. Breuere handed me the preface to this book, which is as follows:

EXPLANATORY.

This little book is based upon a careful study of the city charter, the city ordinances, the Sanitary Code, and the State laws applying to the City of New York. It does not claim to be complete, even as a summary. That would require a large volume. It aims only to define briefly and clearly the duties of the City Government where it touches most frequently and directly the daily life of the citizen.

Its practical use, and the chief purpose for which it was prepared, is to enable the citizen to ascertain easily and quickly what branch of the City Government is responsible for any abuse, nuisance, neglect of duty, or violation of law that may come under his observation.

It should be borne in mind, however, that the work of the various city officials and employes is not necessarily and always subject to criticism or complaint, and in using this little book it will be seen that the same information that enables the citizen to complain intelligently enables him also to praise discriminatingly where praise is merited.

This is a very clear acknowledgment of the creed that the Bureau of City Betterment has adopted upon which to pursue its faith in municipal ideals. This pamphlet can be procured at their offices, at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Twentieth Street. It will be distributed free to any citizen requesting a copy of it.

"And what is your method of investigation?" I asked.

"Primarily we are here a clearing house for all misunderstandings between the city authorities and the citizens whom they serve. We receive complaints of any sort against any negligence or criminality of the city departments. A gas lamp goes out, for instance; a street is not clean, a water main leaks, a police officer fails in his duty. Upon receiving such complaints we look into their causes. Usually we call upon the heads of the city departments for an explanation. I have called personally upon most of these gentlemen, and found them to be in all cases courteous and obliging, willing to co-operate with us in our efforts. We aim only to perfect sociological conditions. We are getting ready a little card containing the telephone numbers of all the city departments, which we shall distribute free of charge."

"Yes, and we are getting the atmosphere also in which the spirit of the city charter is being performed. For instance, we found that the formula of the various public reports made by the different departments of the city is frequently subject to inaccuracies, or presented in a manner so complicated that the average citizen cannot understand them when he reads them. So that we may arrive at a form that will be the simplest and the least likely to make mistakes, we have had copies made of the reports of the city departments in all the big cities of the United States. By comparing all these we will arrive at a form which we will submit for adoption."

"Have you suggested any sociological improvements to the Board of Aldermen?"

"A committee of young lawyers is looking into the methods of the Board of Aldermen. We have a verbatim report of all their meetings—not merely what they do, but what they say, and, more important still, how they say it. We are getting material to arrive at statistical conclusions of the motives that inspire the members of the board. We are following up very closely the items that are 'laid on the table,' keeping track of the motions that are shelved, and deducting therefrom the true spirit in which the Board of Aldermen are fulfilling the obligations of their office."

The Bureau of City Betterment is doing these things with such impartial zeal that it would seem quite impossible to charge them merely with a political interest in their investigation.

By the use of the card system Mr. Breuere told me that they were accumulating a really remarkable file of reflective light upon the sociological possibilities of the City of New York.

So far, of course, so good.

As long as the heads of the city departments co-operate with the Bureau of City Betterment of the Citizens' Union only good can result, but when, at some psychologic moment in their investigations, the young David of sociology actually discovers the giant of graft at his sinister occupation, then will come the challenge, the meeting, and the ultimate issue of a conflict as old as the history of New York.

"You see all this as we do, sympathetically?" asked the young chief of this sociological committee, as I was going, and then I saw by his manner and his inquiry that his was the zeal of the idealist, the heart interest of a young man entirely confident of the integrity of the race. B.

KING CAROL I.

THE DUKE PAUL OF MECKLENBURG-SCHWERIN DEPRIVED OF POWER BY HIS NEPHEW

Completion of the Foundation of St. Mark's New Campanile

THE shaft of the new Campanile at Venice is now slowly rising above the surface of the Piazza di San Marco, as may be seen by turning to the picture presented in the pictorial section of THE TIMES. A month ago the foundation, which was begun in the Summer of 1903, was completed. The old Campanile fell July 14, 1902. Time moves slowly in Italy, and it took just one year to decide the character and material of the new base and just how it should be laid. Investigation had proved that the old foundation was never intended to support the massive weight of brick and masonry which fell in a heap upon the Piazza nearly four years ago. The original superstructure, it was thought, was a watch tower only about half as high.

Although in no way responsible for the collapse of the tower, it was obvious that the foundations uncovered were too narrow for so imposing a superstructure. The idea of rebuilding on the old foundations being abandoned, the question arose whether they should be swept away to make room for an entirely new work, or whether they should be preserved and enlarged so as to form the nucleus of the new foundations.

The latter scheme was adopted and rendered irrevocable by the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the new Campanile in the centre of the old foundations, a ceremony performed with superlative pomp on April 25, 1903, by the Count of Turin, representing King Victor Emmanuel; by Pope Pius X., then Patriarch of Venice, and a host of international, national, and municipal notables.

In order to render the basic structure homogeneous the engineers proceeded to enlarge the old foundations by the original method of piles, platform, clamped stones, and stones arranged stepwise up to the level of the Piazza. A ditch about 16 feet deep—that is, down to the level of the pile-heads—was dug all round the old foundations to the width of about 12 feet and carefully bratticed. Into the area thus laid bare they proceeded to drive 3,076 piles of larchwood from Cadore, fresh cut, so as to insure the presence of abundant resin. The average diameter of the piles is 8¼ inches. Larch was preferred to oak, partly because experience has shown its admirable power of resisting decomposition when buried in the clay of the lagoon bed, and partly because larch piles are straight, whereas oak is often bent and twisted, and would therefore have left frequent interstices. The piles are on an average 13 feet long. They were driven home to almost absolute resistance—i. e., till they yielded only one millimetre to each blow from a weight of 570 pounds raised 4 feet 6 inches. They are calculated to have a carrying power of 90,000 tons. The weight of the tower they are to support is estimated at 20,000 tons, allowing for hollow space. At the angles the piles are in contact with each other, elsewhere they average a dozen to the square metre, the total enlargement of the foundation area amounting to 240 square metres.

While the work of driving the piles was in progress a difficulty manifested itself at the weak northeast angle—the angle that showed a settlement of six inches. The piles ran into a pocket of sand, and this sand stratum was found to extend along the northern face of the foundation up to the northwest angle. The difficulty was overcome by driving thinner and rather longer piles in perfect contact with each other, until they reached the lower clay bed of the pocket. The settlement of the northeast angle was rectified by leaving the piles eight inches higher at this point. The driving of these 3,076 piles was a slow process. It was carried on by the primitive method of hand rope and pulley and weight; eleven ropes, or "campanelle," and eleven hands to each pile-driver.

The pile-driving was completed on Oct. 8, 1904. Then came an attack upon the old foundations, consisting of a cut made eight feet deep all round, so that the new platform could be knitted to the old. Then on the top of the new platform massive blocks of Istrian stone cut in parallelopipedes were carefully cemented together. These Istrian stones, noted for their fine grain, are in eleven courses, and enter into the old foundations to the depth of 6 feet 6 inches, the largest blocks being 9 feet 9 inches in length and 4 feet 7 inches in width. The new shaft is thus being raised from what is practically a new platform, the weight of which is partially borne by the old piles. The expenditure upon the foundations amounts to about $20,000.

Swiss Army Reforms

A DECIDED stand was recently taken by Swiss Socialists in opposing a bill before the Federal Council calling for a reorganization of the army. The bill became a law, pushed through the Council by those who fear that in case of a great Continental war Switzerland may become the scene of the conflict.

According to this new law recruits will serve seventy days instead of forty-two, and instead of serving sixteen days every two years up to the age of 32, the soldier will now have to perform eleven days' duty every year up to the age of 27, but after he has passed into the Landwehr, he will only have to serve another eleven days, instead of ten days in every two years. The object is to ease the burden of the older men and improve the training of the younger.

A battalion of Alpine Chasseurs for each division has been created, the new regiments being recruited from the inhabitants of the mountain districts. The Confederation and cantons will have to support the families of those soldiers who are reduced to poverty during the absence of the head of the house.

The main outlines of the scheme only have so far become law; the details are yet to be settled by the Federal Chambers or by the Government. When completed in every particular it is believed that the reorganization measure will make the country safe against any attempted violation of its neutrality.

Embassies and legations are extra-territorial, and as such do not come under the ordinary jurisdiction, but the French census taker would not be denied the door of the British Embassy in Paris. He called while Edward VII. was a guest there, and was admitted as an act of international courtesy. His Majesty with a grave face signed the paper set before him, "Duc de Lancastre," and filled in the line left for the date of birth. It was not until the census taker returned to the bureau that he learned who the "Duc de Lancastre" was.

A German Sovereign Disciplines His Uncle

WHEN the Prussian Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm married the Duchess Cecile of Mecklenburg-Schwerin last February the alliance gave satisfaction to his father, the Deutsche Kaiser, for two reasons: the Grand Ducal house of Mecklenburg claims to be the oldest ruling in Europe and the only reigning family in Germany of Slavonic origin. Thus a Hohenzollern became united with the descendant of a contemporary of Charlemagne's; thus the Kaiser strengthened his bonds with the Slavonic peoples. Moreover, the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Friedrich Franz IV., brother of Cecile, is an ardent admirer of the German Kaiser and strives to emulate him. He has just given an example of this characteristic by exerting the prerogative of the head of a German reigning house in a family matter.

The Grand Duke has no brothers and only one sister besides Cecile, the Duchess Alexandrine, who married in 1898 Prince Christian, who recently became, on the death of his grandfather, Crown Prince of Denmark. But he has several aunts and uncles who give him more or less annoyance. Conspicuous among them is Duke Paul Friedrich, his late father's eldest brother. Duke Paul is of the independent sort, and, owing to his extensive travels, has ceased to regard, as he recently expressed it, the German Kaiser "as the most illustrious contemporary of the Almighty and little Franz as his archangel."

Duke Paul is a very religious man, and was recently received into the Roman Catholic Church, thereby renouncing all hereditary rights to the Grand Duchy for himself and his descendants. The Duke also spends considerable money, and is regarded by his model nephew as improvident. For these and other reasons the latter has ordered Duke Paul and his wife, formerly Princess Marie of Windisch-Graetz, to submit to the guardianship of the Controller of the Royal Household. Duke Paul, who is 54 years of age, while the Grand Duke, his nephew, is only 24, resents this action, and threatens to take up his abode in Russia.

France Using German Coal

OWING to the strike in the French northeastern coal fields production has fallen off 60,000 to 70,000 tons a day, or, in money value, about $200,000. French coal merchants are, therefore, beginning to look abroad. The export duty on British coal practically prevents this commodity from being utilized, while the small product of the Belgian mines removes all hope of supplies from Belgium. German coal has, therefore, begun to invade France. This coal, owing to special railway rates, is now delivered in France below the price of the native commodity. The French Eastern Railway Company has just organized a special weighing station to deal with German coal crossing the frontier.

Apropos of the general coal situation the following paragraph appears in L'Economiste Français: "According to the official statistics of the mineral industry, France in 1904 produced 34,168,000 tons of coal, against 236,147,000 tons produced in Great Britain, 169,449,000 tons in Germany, 40,254,000 tons in Austria-Hungary, and 324,133,000 tons in the United States. The coal production of France is, therefore, only the tenth of that of the United States, the seventh of that of Great Britain, the fifth of that of Germany. This weakness of our coal production constitutes the greatest inferiority of France."

Isle of Man in Revolt

HALL CAINE'S fellow-Manxmen secured a representative Constitution from the British Imperial Government in 1866, and imperial interests have since been looked after by a Deemster and Vicar General appointed by the Home Office. The House of Keys, or lower branch of the Manx Legislature, has always been opposed to such appointments, and now its radical wing threatens to deprive the imperial Government of any hand at all in the administration of Manx affairs, with the exception of a nominal wield of the British sceptre.

A significant note from the British Home Office was recently read in the House of Keys. It "requested and required" the loyalty of Manxmen to the Constitution of 1866, and added that the British Government could not consider for a moment the question of home rule for the Isle of Man, as such an autonomous situation was a menace to imperial interests. Moreover, continued agitation would only lead to one thing—the abrogation of the Constitution and complete annexation.

How France Escaped a German Alliance

M. ETIENNE LAMY is doing his tactless best, through a series of articles in the Eclair of Paris, to solidify the Anglo-French entente by removing the last disturbing taint of the Fashoda fiasco of 1898.

He currently states that when the meeting of Kitchener with the Anglo-Egyptian forces and the expedition of Commandant Marchand occurred the German Ambassador in Paris suggested to M. Hanotaux, then French Foreign Minister, a Franco-German entente having for its primary object the protection of Portuguese independence against English encroachment. While M. Hanotaux was coquetting with the proposal the Méline Ministry, of which he was a member, fell. On the day that he left the Quai d'Orsay M. Hanotaux wrote a confidential Ministerial minute on the subject of the German proposal, leaving it to his successor to come to a decision in the matter. Then came the Brisson Ministry, with M. Delcassé, and all possibility of an alliance with Germany was lost. Germany was told that she could not count on French help in an expedition against England.

If France, says the writer, had co-operated with Germany at the moment when England was troubled by Menelik in Abyssinia and Kruger in the Transvaal she would certainly have gained what she has now irrevocably lost, as England would at that moment have submitted to a compromise rather than run the risk of a war which might have imperiled her supremacy.

For his conduct during the crises in question M. Lamy soundly rates M. Delcassé, who, he says, either committed an act of folly or a serious crime. When the British demanded the evacuation of Fashoda, M. Delcassé naturally wished to await the arrival of Lieut. Baratier, who was bringing news from Marchand, but Lord Salisbury pressed for Fashoda or war. M. Delcassé yielded, and three days before the arrival of Marchand's envoy Fashoda was bartered away, at a time when its possession would have been invaluable to France.

Another Umbrella Duel

A YEAR ago a duel with umbrellas was fought in Paris outside the Gaité-Montparnasse in the Rue de la Gaité between Gaston de Faux and Hugues Lebon. The quarrel began in the neighboring concert hall, and would have been settled, as the French say, "at another time and in another manner," had not the contestants been armed with steel-rod umbrellas, which they proceeded to manipulate in the fashion of rapiers, with the result that M. Lebon was conveyed to the hospital minus several front teeth and with a torn ear, while his opponent crept home nursing a punctured cheek.

A more fatal umbrella duel has just furnished a sensational case for the criminal court of Liège. Dr. Sury of Spa, in a fit of anger, insulted Dr. Delhaise of Liège while the latter was peacefully reading a paper in a café. Enraged by Delhaise's calmness, Dr. Sury threatened him with his umbrella. Delhaise, while attempting to rise, parried the blow with his own umbrella, whereupon Dr. Sury lunged forward and the steel rod of his umbrella entered his opponent's head through the eye to a depth of three inches. Dr. Delhaise died subsequently. The court condemned Dr. Sury to eighteen months in prison and to pay $20,000 damages to the widow of the deceased.

Russia's Fate in Women's Hands

LE JOURNAL DES DEBATS of Paris pays a tribute to women in general who have lived in revolutionary countries and in particular to the Russian women, who, it says, have not yet received their due as the heart and soul, if not, indeed, the brains of the present revolutionary movement. It continues:

"Russia, of all civilized countries, politically the most backward, is at the same time the country where certain classes of women take the most active part in social emancipation and the overthrow of the existing order. More even than American women do those of Russia emulate and surpass men in virility and intrepidity. Recruited from the aristocracy and the people, they enjoy in the revolutionary parties an exciting and exalted rôle."

Roumania a Quarter of a Century Old

ONE hardly ever hears of Roumania except through a revival of the perennial Macedonian revolution or a chronic outbreak of the anti-Semitic distemper. As a traveler once remarked, "Roumania is a place colored yellow on school maps of 'Turkey in Europe,' but no one ever goes there unless in search of rare postage stamps." Evidently the traveler for the moment forgot that the Queen, as "Carmen Sylva," is among the best-read European novelists, and that literary pilgrimages are occasionally made to her shrine.

Just now, however, Roumania invites attention from the public eye through the fact that she is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of her existence as a kingdom, which almost coincides with the fortieth anniversary of the triumphal entry into Bucharest of the late Prince Karl of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, the last "Domn" of Roumania, whose son, Carol I., became King of the country when it was raised from a principality to a kingdom in the Spring of 1881.

Before his accession, Carol I. had married, Nov. 15, 1869, Princess Elizabeth von Neuwied, soon to become known throughout literary Europe as "Carmen Sylva." She is now in her sixty-sixth year, and is four years younger than her husband. Although the area of Roumania is a little less than 50,000 square miles, with a population of about 6,000,000, King Carol, if reckoned in the light of the extent of his domain and the number of his subjects, would be regarded as the wealthiest monarch in Europe, for his Crown lands yield $467,600 yearly, and he is down in the Budget for an allowance from the State of $237,000. He is lucky, however, if he is able to collect a tithe of the sum, for his country, besides having nominally the wealthiest monarch, has also, according to its area and population, the most enormous public debt. This amounts to $224,969,905.

Probably these are some of the reasons why the lone royal couple—there are no children—lives a quiet existence at Bucharest in Winter and spends the Summer in the modest country place at Sinaya, and why very possibly the King invents hunting arms and practices scientific farming and the Queen writes novels, plays, and poems.

Popularizing a French Coin

IF M. Poincarré, the new French Minister of Finance, does nothing else, he will at least go down in history with the reputation of having made the exceedingly unpopular twenty-five-centime nickel coin the most sought after product from the French Mint. The coin has long been boycotted by shopkeepers, and it has been as hard to get rid of in Paris as foreign coppers. The other day, however, a rumor emanated from the Ministry of Finance that on five coins of the unpopular issue might be found the word "Rothschild" in tiny letters, and that the first person who took one of these five coins to Rothschild's Bank in the Rue Laffitte would receive 25,000f., or $5,000, for it; 10,000f. would be paid for the second nickel, 5,000f. for the third and fourth, and 2,000f. for the last of the five.

Why Rothschild should offer this gratuitous lottery was explained on the ground that the banker had a large stock of nickels on hand which he was anxious to get rid of as quickly as possible. Now everybody in Paris grabs every twenty-five-centime nickel coin within reach, carefully examines it under a magnifying glass, and then passes it on to other eager hands.

"There was a time," says Le Petit Parisien, "when the brasseries constituted the rendezvous of all the artists, writers, and politicians of Paris. This was so during the last years of the Second Empire and the first years of the Third Republic. There is now no literary brasserie. Here and there in some café the disabled of other times, the 'failures,' the waifs of the antique past, try to continue the traditions of art at the brasserie. But it is a bad custom which has had its day."

Work for the New German Colonial Office

THE pros and cons of Emperor William's pet project to turn the Colonial Bureau of the German Foreign Office into a Ministry of the Colonies were set forth in these columns a fortnight ago. A more recent cable dispatch announced the fact that the Kaiser's scheme had carried the day.

The first business to be dealt with by the new Ministry will be the report of the Franco-German commission appointed to delimit the boundary between the German Kameruns and the French Congo. This commission has decided that Missoum-Missoum is two and a half miles within the German boundary. Capt. Cotte headed the French mission. Missoum-Missoum, it will be remembered, is where a conflict took place between the French and Germans on May 9, 1905. It was doubtful whether the town was on French or German soil. A French factory had been established there and guarded by native French troops.

The French report of the incident said that a German Captain commanding a detachment of German regulars told Maissa Coumba, the native commander, that he had come to establish a military post. Maissa Coumba referred him to the civil administrator at Basse Sangha. The German troops then seized Maissa. In the scuffle a gun went off. The Germans fired at the post and killed five men—two who were without arms—and made the rest prisoners.

The German report said that Maissa had caused the trouble by ordering his men to fire, and that only three men were killed. The French did not make it a question of infringement of national rights, but accused the Germans of improper haste in using a superior force against native troops.

But, of course, the most important question for the imperial Colonial Ministry is the situation in German Southwest Africa. According to the latest advices obtained by Col. Deimling, and ready to be laid before the Ministry, the rebellion of Hottentots and Hereros in the centre and north of the colony has been crushed, while that in the southern parts continues undiminished. The total number of German troops in the colony is now approximately 14,000, of which 3,500 are engaged against the rebels, while the remaining 10,500 are guarding the lines of communication and garrisoning the various towns in the recently rebellious central and northern districts.

The Colonel points out a dangerous significance in the fact that, although 10,700 Hereros have been taken prisoners, only 500 rifles had been obtained from them; in the case of the 12,600 Hottentot prisoners only 300 rifles had been forthcoming. Most of the surrendered rifles were firearms of an antique type, while it is positively known that the rebels were quite fully armed with modern guns. It is believed that these guns have been hidden, to be brought forth at a more opportune time.

The Colonial Ministry will also find it incumbent upon itself to recognize the aid given the German troops along the British frontier through the friendly co-operation of the British authorities there. This obligation is emphasized by Col. Deimling, who frankly declares that "our operations would have been utterly futile in this region without the generous, unsolicited aid accorded us by the authorities in British South Africa."

Another Blow at Polish Nationalism

IT may be recalled that a few years ago the German Kaiser devised the scheme of buying up large territories in the Polish provinces of Eastern Prussia and inviting German agrarians to repurchase the land in small lots, so that the district might become Germanized. The plan failed. German farmers would not migrate thither, and a Polish syndicate promptly repurchased the land at cost. The Kaiser has now devised another scheme to Germanize this part of Prussia.

During the last few weeks public attention has been attracted in an unusual degree to the subject of Prussian peerages conferred by the Kaiser on a number of wealthy merchants. The Kölnische Zeitung authoritatively announces that these appointments are directly connected with the Prussian Government's policy in regard to the Polish question. As has already been pointed out, the Polish Nationalists have been buying up large quantities of land destined for Teutonic farmers. Their idea has been and still is that even if a "foreign" power, as they term Germany, owns the territory, nevertheless the land itself shall belong to persons of Polish nationality. This purchase of land is regarded as one of the necessary steps toward a revival of the ancient Kingdom of Poland. Numerous German aristocrats in want of ready money have sold their East Prussian estates to Polish purchasers, in many cases for sums considerably in excess of the real value of the land. The German newspapers have repeatedly denounced these noblemen for their "unpatriotic" conduct in selling land to anti-German Poles for their own selfish pecuniary purposes.

The German Kaiser, by conferring peerages on wealthy merchants, desires to encourage the purchase and entail of large estates in the East Prussian provinces, thereby permanently preventing the Poles from acquiring possession of the land. It is understood that the newly created peers pledged themselves to provide by the terms of the entail that their estates cannot under any condition pass to descendants not of purely German descent. This clause is apparently intended to prevent the Kaiser's wishes being evaded by possible intermarriage of the new peers' descendants with Poles.

A Regicide Journal

NOVI POKRET" (The New Movement) is the title of the regicide journal which is now appearing in Belgrade after long and careful preparation. The leader in the initial number points out that every man's first duty was to serve his country without respect of persons, even of the highest in the land, and at every risk and sacrifice.

There is an account of the assassination of Emperor Paul, and the tragedy is depicted in such glowing colors as to show that the writer is an "expert." Another part of the paper states that King Edward VII., "who is already advanced in years, has been exceedingly unwell lately, and that his physicians give little hope of his complete restoration to health."

On the whole, the paper shows little journalistic insight or literary ability. It proves that it has been started for the exclusive purpose of defending the regicide band responsible for the death of King Alexander from the attacks of the Servian press, which, with hardly any exceptions, is opposed to it.

LOOKING backard, with the experience of the past to supplement one's present judgment, it is not difficult to understand why "Charley's Aunt" was one of the greatest farcical successes of its day, nor why its revival is apparently enjoying a large share of favor. This highly amusing effort of Brandon Thomas's deserves its popularity. It is clean, wholesome, ingenious—altogether a thing apart from the ordinary brand of so-called farce-comedy. And as a matter of fact there has been no more agreeable experience among the lighter offerings of the year than is provided in the opportunity for renewed acquaintance with that genial old lady who, after ten years' absence, has returned to us "from Brazil, where the nuts come from."

The laughs in "Charley's Aunt" are spontaneous and develop naturally from the incongruous juxtaposition of character rather than from mere factitious and prearranged circumstance. One must swallow improbability at the outset, to be sure, to get any lively enjoyment from the piece, but without some such improbability in the primary exposition few farces could or would be written. Mr. Thomas's little piece is superior to most of its class, however, in the generally agreeable manner in which an impossible situation is carried to a conclusion. And though the long arm of coincidence is employed rather freely for the purpose of sentimental interest, the humorous complications are generally managed without a resort to too violent straining over impossibilities; always assuming, of course, that one has survived the first shock of accepting as reasonable the supposition that a half dozen or more presumably sane persons could be deceived by such a masquerade as that of Lord Fancourt Babberly, who passes himself off as the estimable and wealthy relative.

In writing his farce Mr. Thomas apparently proceeded upon a well-defined and understood law of comic effect, i. e., that its appreciation proceeds from the perception of an incongruity. It would be difficult to conceive of a more incongruous series of relationships than result from the proximity of the fictitious aunt and her ardent masculine wooers, and, for alert minds, a more insinuating bit of genuine fun could hardly be imagined than is contained in the situation where the supposed Donna Lucia d'Alvadores is left alone with a company of women while the men retire to exercise the established right to a post-prandial smoke.

Here one has an extremely ingenious application of the comic law based on the combination of the perceptual and conceptual senses. The mere fact that Charley's Aunt in the course of his masquerade has found himself relegated to the society of the women while his companions regale themselves in the masculine delights of cigars and liquor is in itself amusing to any one familiar with the ordinary mental processes of the normal man under such conditions, but something more is needed to give the joke keen zest. That something is provided in the imagination of the spectator, spurred to action by the most delicate suggestion in lines and business. What if the women, emulating the examples of their lords, shall take advantage of their quiet hour alone to exchange purely feminine confidences, gossip, and story, as men, under similar conditions, are almost always sure to do? The point is further emphasized in Charley's character. Generally regarded by his chums as the easy butt of a jest, made a convenience to them at a considerable sacrifice of dignity and comfort on his own part, he still manages to qualify in the minds of his audience as a man of good parts, a gentleman, and not a cad. It is obviously impossible for him to make his identity known without precipitating his friends into all kinds of trouble. At the same time it is just this sort of man who would fully realize the delicacy of such a position and squirm in consequence.

This is not humor of the highest type, perhaps, but it is of a kind that makes an appeal to the intellectual as well as to the visual sense. And such a combination, uncommon enough in every style of play, is especially rare in farce.

The piece is interesting at the present, then, as providing a fine specimen of the best sort of farce-comedy, and it may also be studied with advantage on account of the happiness of its execution. The art of the farceur is an extremely difficult one. Indeed, one of the surprises with which the observer is most frequently confronted is the tendency of amateurs to select farce as the best medium for their energy. It is generally assumed that anybody can act farce, and in consequence both youthful and mature dilettantes of the theatre are most frequently found exploiting their supposed talents in that class of play. Such effort is almost always misdirected, for there is no kind of acting which, to be generally effective, requires more adroitness or more subtlety in expression. Apart from the touch-and-go lightness, in itself exceedingly difficult to attain even by professional players, there are various essential elements which must combine in the proper acting of farce, and which may only be realized by the fusion of exceptional talent with thoughtful experiment and discriminating study. The best actor of farce is the man who, while apparently serious, somehow manages to convey a hint of underlying humor; like one who tells a story with eye twinkling in an otherwise grave and serious face.

Mr. Girardot, for example, succeeds in conveying an impression of distress at various points in his masquerading experiences, but one always realizes that there will be an end to his disguise, and that more pleasant and satisfying experiences will follow. Thus it is that incidents which might otherwise engender sympathy are converted by the skillful farceur into occasions for laughter, for when one comes to the analysis it will be found that the line of demarkation between the grave and the gay is frequently very fine. Much depends on the slant, the point of view, and the handling. The same situations that on the one hand have made tragedy, have been transposed into the realms of laughter by skillful writers of comedy. We find in Lear to cite only one instance the treatment accorded an old helpless father by his inhuman daughters so handled as to result in one of the most impressive tragedies ever written, and yet, exactly the same subject is made to form the basis of a comedy by Aristophanes. And the actor on his part can do much toward the same end.

Mr. Girardot skates happily at times over some very thin ice. In less accomplished hands occasional scenes (such as those between Charley's Aunt and the two young girls who seek her—or rather him—with their confidences) might easily become offensive. That these incidents merely develop additional cause for laughter is a testimony to the delicate and refined method which the comedian employs. The cast on the whole is satisfying enough, and the acting of R. Peyton Carter makes an especial appeal because of its authoritative naturalness and mellow humor.

Mr. Edgar Selwyn's farce, "It's All Your Fault," is clearly a result of familiarity with old models, and its chief failing results from too frequent employment of obvious and purely factitious circumstance. Whereas "Charley's Aunt" is pretty certain to inspire amusement by reason of its own organic humor, the enjoyment of the new farce demands a positive willingness to laugh on the part of the spectator. In other words, if one goes to the theatre determined to have a pleasant hour under any and all conditions—there are many persons who thus piece out a play's shortcomings—there will be no particular reason to come away from this in a disappointed state of mind. Herein, however, is found one of the radical differences between the two farces. "Charley's Aunt" defies seriousness. Given an unresponsive mood, however, one could sit back during the whole progress of Mr. Selwyn's farce without a smile.

The reason is plain. It is all familiar. There is not a line, not a situation in the entire three acts which is not wholly superficial. No occasion for any intellectual exercise here; it would be effort wasted. You can build all sorts of fanciful comedy thoughts on that one incident in the Thomas farce, which has already been cited, but try to go behind the characters in "It's All Your Fault," try to piece out their subsequent actions by what is already set forth on the stage, and you will find that you are dealing with mere puppets. They are made to dance amusingly at times, but they have no volition of their own. "It's All Your Fault" is, in short, a machine-made farce. As such it does exhibit some mechanical cleverness. Those much-despised melodramas of the Bowery, whatever their failings, have at least the merit of sincerity. There is no pretense about such plays as "The Queen of the Opium Ring" and "The Millionaire Detective." The men who put such pieces together go on the principle that a big thrill at the end of each act is worth all the rest put together. Bending their entire effort, then, to the building up of cumulative situations, they succeed in stirring their hearers exactly as they expect to stir them, and as they like to be stirred. Mr. Selwyn in his comic effort proceeds in much the same way. He apparently believes in the effective curtain, and sprinkles his gunpowder in several rows all leading to a common centre. Then he touches a match to each row, and in a few minutes the big explosion comes. If your surprise is not as great as the dramatist would have liked the fact is easily explained. You have all along seen the process by which the result was to be accomplished.

Of characterization in the real sense there is none. Compare this farce with "Mr. Hopkinson." Here, too, there is a certain sort of obviousness. One knows at the outset about what sort of experiences will result from the introduction of the bounder into the fashionable set. But as these experiences are set forth, it develops that an amazingly sure hand wields a scalpel on brain and heart, and human folly is laid bare with unmistakable clearness in the dissection.

The success of "Mr. Hopkinson," however, it may have been explained in London, is here clearly not a result of its exposure of the West End fashionable set. There is biting, bitter satire in the revelation, but we have learned from repeated experiences that social satire, as such, may be something too much for the general playgoer. The farce appeals chiefly because its characterization is such, both in the writing and the acting, that the incongruity of relationships produces an unmistakably comic effect.

Doing Shakespeare with a "Fit-Up"

"Hamlet" Complete in Twenty Minutes---A Quick-Change Performance of "Macbeth"---Etienne Girardot's Quaint Experiences.

FROM "Charley's Aunt" to "Othello" is a far cry. But the memory of a player is as full of queer contrasts as the shelves of a curiosity shop. Etienne Girardot, in the black silk of the amiable Lady from Brazil, is a long way from Macduff or Hamlet's father's ghost. But just catch Mr. Girardot on a rainy afternoon in some quiet corner of the Players, and if he happens to be in the mood he will tell you a hundred and one good things of his early days, when he was doing Shakespeare in the English provinces at the rate of forty thousand lines a week.

Years ago, he says, he anticipated Henri de Vries's performance. Mr. Girardot once played eight parts in "Macbeth." He tells the story with much vividness of voice and gesture.

"It was while I was hardly more than a boy doing all kinds of odds and ends of stock company work at Plymouth. We didn't keep a very large staff of actors on hand. Everything had to be managed with the strictest economy. Each player had to make himself go as far as possible in filling out the list of parts.

"One night Tom King came down from London to play Macbeth, which was, of course, for us a good deal of an event. As luck would have it, we were uncommonly short of actors that week. Being the youngest, I usually expected to bear the brunt of these occasions, but even I was dumfounded that night when I found myself cast for eight parts.

"There was nothing to do but make the best of it, so I arranged a system of wigs, coats, and swords hanging around in convenient places in the wings, and started in. It was a hot pace. I tore on and off that stage like a man doing two armies. Off as Malcolm, into another wig, back again as an old man, then out for a change to Macduff. Once I found I had to rush off as one murderer so that I could come in again and be murdered as Banquo.

"All the while the growing astonishment of Tom King's Macbeth, who had not been posted as to our makeshift, was a sight to see. He was a big man, with a voice of Shakespearean depth and breadth, and he was noted in private for harmlessly fluent and picturesque profanity.

"When I appeared before him in the third disguise his astonishment became too much for him. As I hailed him in each succeeding part, now as Macduff, now as a servant, he began to greet me under his breath in characteristic fashion.

"When I stalked in as Banquo's ghost he came out with a terrific—

Prithee, see there! Behold! Look! Lo!
How say you now?

adding sotto voce for my especial benefit:

"'Merciful Gabriel, how many times is this?'

"As I rose from the witches' caldron came the usual:

Strike me blind. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo.
Down!

with an added:

"'Damme, here's six.'

"When in the last act I rushed on as the servant, to be greeted with:

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-
fac'd loon!
Where gott'st thou that goose look?

and an added:

"'And that seventh wig,' I nearly choked with laughter.

"After it was all over King looked me up and told me I was the most comprehensive—with several intensifying adjectives—Shakespearean player he ever hoped to see.

"Another time down in Devonshire we were doing 'Hamlet' with a 'fit-up.' A 'fit-up,' as you may know, was a kind of movable set that could be carted about from town to town; a back drop with three or four columns painted on it did for a palace, a few curtains that looked heavier than they were made a chamber, and one or two chairs, with the help of a scarf or a piece of imitation ermine, made thrones and halls of state. The 'fit-up' could be erected pretty much anywhere where a platform was available. It went together like a child's puzzle, and could be taken down and stowed away in a cart in a marvelously short space of time.

Etienne Girardot.

"On the occasion I speak of I played the ghost, the first actor, Laertes, and the priest, took part in a farce which followed the tragedy, besides helping to erect the little theatre and take it down.

"Sometimes the 'fit-up' was pretty shaky. Duels and battles were apt to loosen its joints. I remember another evening, when the play again happened to be 'Hamlet,' that directly I gave up the ghost as Laertes I rolled over and grabbed one of the wooden braces just in time to keep the whole structure from falling on top of us."

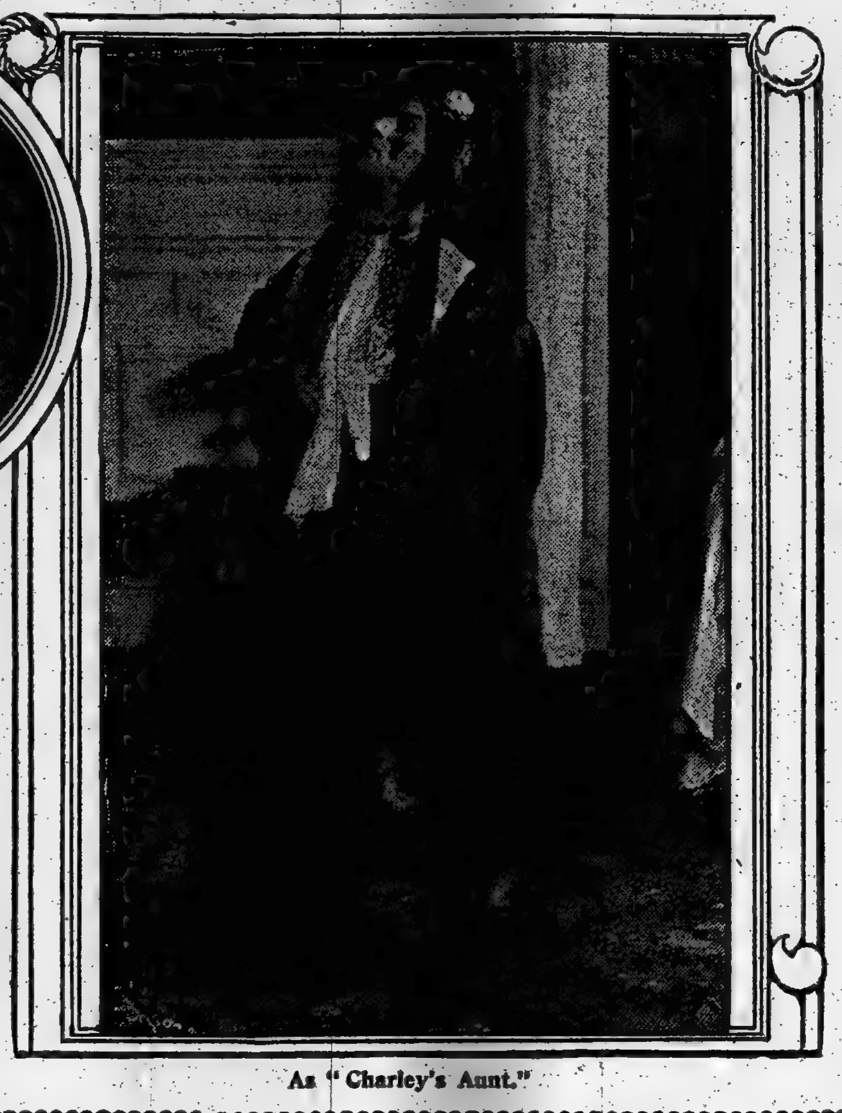
Mr. Girardot is ordinarily rather earnest for an actor. He likes to talk about the serious side of what he is trying to accomplish, but when his memory slips back to these apprenticeship days, he becomes as droll and anecdotal as one could ask.

"When I think of the wigs I have worn!" sighed Mr. Girardot, passing his hand over his thinning hair. "Playing so many parts, I had a perfect perukery in those days. Most of them were second hand, because I couldn't afford new ones. I have no doubt the wearing of those thick, hot masses of hair night after night accounts for my vanishing locks.



As "Charley's Aunt."

"We found actor folk were not always popular among the English villagers. If you belonged to the profession, you could usually be spotted by your luggage and dress. In those impecunious companies swords were the most valuable props. You usually got as good a one as you could afford, and kept it fast by you. When you arrived in a new town, perhaps late at night, and found the inn full, your experience was apt to be something like this:

"Sword in hand, you go to a lodging house close by the inn, and knock bravely. The hostess puts her head out of an upper window, and greets you cheerfully, for all you have routed her out of bed. She has a shrewd eye for guests. Then, as she gets a better look at you, her face falls.

"'Be ye mummers?' she says dourly. Then, without waiting for an answer, 'A see ye be. A cannot tak ye,' and the window slams down. Nor will rappings and beseechings induce her to open it again. In all probability you go to sleep on the hay in the inn stable.

"Very different was the reception one got from people who pretended to belong to the profession. We used to be claimed for brothers and received with open arms by every showman that ever took a penny for a peep at a two-headed calf. I think the Richardson shows were the funniest. On every market day in Cornwall you were sure to find somewhere about the village square a little curtained booth on wheels, with three or four stolid-looking figures in purple robes and tinsel crowns, lined up on a bench in front. The leader of the troop, who was always the fattest, and had the reddest face, held forth in thick, impressive tones:

"'Enter in, ladies and gentlemen, and hear the dramas of the immortal Bard of Avon. The complete play of the melancholy Dane in twenty minutes, all the great scenes of "Romeo and Juliet" in the half of an hour. See the bloody Lady Macbeth, hear the noble Antony.'

"And they really did Shakespeare at the rate of one play every twenty minutes or so, with fearful and wonderful mouthings of odds and ends of the text, and with tremendous hackings of wooden swords and daggers.

"I remember once with a group of brother actors starting in to one of these shows for a lark. We had just paid our money when the mottled-faced showman spotted us. He drew himself up, pushed back the silver with an air, and turned purple with gratification. 'Brothers of the profession,' he said, waving us to the door, 'enter and welcome. Take front seats. Listen and enjoy. Heaven forefend that I should ever take silver from those who help me to perpetuate the fame of our immortal poet.'

"It was the same with all these market place folks, from the fat woman to the proprietor of the performing fleas. One night we drifted into a shooting gallery—five shots at the bell for a penny a round. We had just finished our first round when the man who ran the place bowed low before us.

"''Nother round apiece, gentlemen,' he cried. ''Nother round apiece. Brothers in art, ye know. Brothers in art.'"

"Those were queer, rambling days," concluded Mr. Girardot laughing, "but they certainly taught patience, adaptability, and no end of human charity. They didn't last very long with me. I was soon in London making my real start with the Bancrofts at the Haymarket. Whenever I think now of those rough and tumble Shakespeare performances I am more and more struck with the sound honesty and respect at the bottom of them. They were funny enough in many ways, but they put more into my life than merely something to laugh at."

A Fragment of Real Life in a New Stage Play

AN hour at Ellis Island is full of smiles and tears. The newly arrived emigrant, before he has changed his native garb, with his outlandish boxes and bundles still about him, is eternally interesting. His meetings and partings are full of a childish exuberance and abandon. He is never so picturesque or so pathetic as when he has just doubtfully intrusted himself to the great machinery of a new land and law.

He hasn't been much on the stage—this emigrant—but a fragment of his life finds its way there in a one-act play called "The Land of the Free," by W. C. De Mille, which was seen for the first time at the Vassar Aid Society matinée last Monday. It is a simple little story, one that happens day after day.

In a room of the big Immigration Building, with its desk and its blue-coated official, an Italian workman walks excitedly up and down. His clothes are cheap and poor, but they are plainly not his working garb, and a bright holiday handkerchief is knotted about his throat. His eyes are keen and expectant. Evidently it is a great day for him. It needs little encouragement from the good-natured officer to bring out the whole story.

A big Mediterranean steamer is just landing its steerage passengers. Luigi, as he peers through the gates at the incoming crowd, is almost beside himself with delight.

"I waita three year," he explains, breathlessly. "I work verra hard and I sava de money to bring to me my Maria and my two littlea ones."

He can hardly wait for the gate to be opened. But the officer has more to find out. His questioning brings out further details. Luigi earns $9 a week—with his pick and shovel. The wife is not strong. She speaks a little English. The officer looks doubtful, but says nothing.

Then all at once the boat is in. The Italian catches a sight of them through the gates.

"Na, na, Signore, she comea last. She gotta lame back an' two baby. Ah—Dio! Maybe she missa da boat—Ah! Vedete Maria mia Ecco—Vedete ecco—Ah mia moglie—ecco!"

In another instant, the frail little wife, in her Neapolitan costume, and the two children, with their bags and to Naples. It is hard to make Luigi understand. Maria, hearing nothing, plays happily with the children. The poor husband is stunned.

"Napoli! She go back to Napoli! No, no. Ah, Dio Mio! You don' understand," he goes on, wistfully. "I work three year an' sava da money to bring her to me. Your boss he cannota send her back—we liva all right on nine dollar week. I take her away. You leta me go—eh?"

"It's hard on you," says the officer, "but it's the law."

Luigi scorns the notion.

"Law? You taka my wife away; you senda my littlea boy and girl back to Napoli, an' you say it is da law. Na, na. America is a free country. I pay for her to comea to me. I don't steal, so whata de law got to say?"

But throats, tears, reasonings are all in vain. Luigi at last stealthily offers the blue-coated official $7, his all, wrapped up in a handkerchief, as a bribe. The officer frowns and says firmly:

"I cannot. I didn't make the law. I can't help you. We have to do this every day."

"Every day?" Luigi's eyes grow wide with pain. "You doa this every day? Ah, Dio! Every day you breaka da heart!"

Then he goes to Maria, takes her in his arms and explains brokenly what it all means.

"They will not leta you stay—Maria mia—we have waited long—we musta stilla wait."

In the face of her tearful dismay he even tries to be cheerful:

"Say, looka here," he cries; "you goa back to Napoli now, an' bimebye I getta da more money. I maka maybe twelve—fifteen dollar week. Then I senda for you an' Fabio an' Tessa, an' they letta you stay."

But Maria is overcome.

"Back to Napoli? Alone?" she sobs.

A sudden thought comes to Luigi.

"No—no; not alone. I goa too. If they senda you, I goa too."

He rushes over to the officer with his poor seven silver dollars, only to be met with the cruel truth, "Not half enough for your ticket."

Meanwhile the boat is returning. The officer lays his hand kindly on Maria's shoulder. The children look wonderingly on. Painfully the little trio pick up their bundles and turn dumbly back to the great gates. Luigi embraces them between his sobs.

"Don't cry, carissima; don'ta cry—I soon make twelve, fifteen dollar week and buya da peanut stand, an' I keep da little home. Then you come again to stay. Don'ta cry—you goa to the Mader in Napoli. Ah, Dio! We have waita three year an' I must senda you back. Maybe next year I send for you again."

Even after they have passed through the gate, which clicks sharply in his face, he calls bravely after them:

"Addio, carissima. You, Fabio, be a gooda boy—and I senda for you again. Addio carissima; I keepa da littlea home for you. Be a gooda boy, Fabio. I send for you again. Ah, Dio! Dio! I send for you."

As they pass out of his sight his voice fails him and he falls sobbing against the gate.

The author is said to have got his idea for the piece from a newspaper paragraph read at the breakfast table, describing in three lines a case of the sort.

Robert Paton Gibbs, who played Luigi, studied his type with the help of a Neapolitan who has been long enough away from home to know the salient characteristics of his own people. The extra women who fit so well into the picture are caretakers of the Hudson Theatre.

"We used to rehearse the piece every now and then down in the coal cellar," explained Mr. Gibbs, "and these two women used to come and weep over it."

EUGENE ARAM AGAIN.

SINCE its original presentation Martin Harvey, the English actor, has had his play, "After All," founded upon incidents in the career of Eugene Aram, thoroughly revised and remodeled. Thus improved, it has become one of the most popular pieces in his repertoire.

He has now decided to rename it "Eugene Aram, or After All," although the first half of the title clashes with that of the drama produced many years ago by Sir Henry Irving on the same subject.

Mr. Harvey is now busy with rehearsals of his latest acquisition, "The Rapparee Trooper," a light comedy by B. M. Dix and E. G. Sutherland, which he intends to present at Newcastle some six weeks hence.

MISSED PART OF THE PLAY.

ARGUS himself was none too well equipped to be a stage manager. With all the care that is put into producing a modern play queer discrepancies develop every now and then, even after a piece has been running several months. A curious discovery of the kind was made last week in "Peter Pan."

Those who have seen the play will remember that in the third act the scene is set on two levels, the forest and the faithful Indians above, and the "lost boys" in their underground home below. The edge of the platform representing the level of the ground, of course comes forward to the proscenium arch. At the back of the lower part of the scene are the dark stairway and a little curtained alcove where Tinker Bell retires in her negligé moments.

Through the acuteness of somebody who happened to go up to the topmost balcony of the theatre last Monday night, it became known for the first time that, owing to the projection of the edge of the platform, people in the second balcony this season have never seen the wicked pirate chieftain put poison in Peter's medicine, while the "wonderfulest boy in all the world" is asleep. Neither have they ever beheld the threatened dissolution of Tinker Bell after she has heroically swallowed the poisoned dose.

Directly this surprising fact was learned it was announced that the back of the lower scene would be moved three feet forward so that everybody may see all that goes on. Which seems to prove that in things theatrical as elsewhere it is never safe to be satisfied.

MANSFIELD'S QUICK LUNCH.

AT the conclusion of his New York engagement Mr. Mansfield goes direct to Cincinnati. There is a little suburb under the highlands of the Ohio River, about twelve miles from Cincinnati, called Fernbank, and it takes pride in being each year for one week the residence of Richard Mansfield.

Mr. Mansfield stands in high favor with Fernbank's citizens. The leading grocer tells of an amusing incident that happened the first time Mr. Mansfield came to Fernbank. One day a stranger came into the store. He was erect, athletic, distinguished, and groomed in a Brummelian fashion quite foreign to local experience. He asked if they had graham wafers in the store, and bought a ten-cent package.

"Now," said the stranger, "where can I put these?" Noting the shopkeeper's surprise, he whispered in his ear who he was, and then explained: "I want to put this package of biscuits on the shelf where no one will touch them; you and the clerk will know they are mine, and every day during my walk I can come in here and help myself."

The proud shopkeeper quickly made a place for Mr. Mansfield's lunch, and every day the distinguished actor came in, reached for a couple of wafers, passed a how-d'y-do, and went out. He has done it each visit since.

Some Fresh News and Cues from the Theatrical Prompter

THOSE who have seen "The Embassy Ball" will remember the little negro boy who plays the part of the hotel porter and whose chief accomplishment is a high-pitched and wholly irrelevant laugh. It appears that this is a purely stage cachinnation. The members of the company get much amusement from the instantaneous disappearance of any sign of humor the moment he turns his back to the footlights.

Moreover, he has a comfortable faculty of sleeping soundly between his cues. One night last week Walter Hitchcock, who mainly looks out that the boy is on hand at the proper time, forgot him until the last moment. Then the little chap had to be hastily shoved through the door and allowed to wake up on the stage, which he did with a perceptible and audible yawn that delighted the people in the near-by boxes.

"Arms and the Man," which opens at the Lyric next week, is likely to be the last of the Shaw plays in which Arnold Daly will be heard for some time. Next season Mr. Daly is to return to the Lyric with a novel venture. He will produce four one-act plays which together fill an evening's performance. They are "The Lemonade Boy," "The Monkey's Paw," "The System of Dr. Gouron," a close version of the gruesome Lavedan play, and an unnamed piece by W. W. Jacobs.

Henry B. Stanford, who is to star next season in his own romantic play, "John of Strathbourne," is, as by the chance of birth, an Egyptian. Educated for the English bar, he straightway adopted the stage as a profession. He has played in London at the Haymarket Theatre, at the Criterion, with Sir Charles Wyndham, and at the Shaftesbury. He went to Africa as the leading man of George Edwardes's company, and later played the leading juvenile rôles in Sir Henry Irving's company up to the time of the latter's death. Mr. Stanford came to America this season to appear in the rôle of Prinzevai with Mme. Kalich in "Monna Vanna."

In his new play, the scene of which is laid in France, he acts both the rôle of John of Strathbourne and the adopted son of a woodman.

The matinée in behalf of the Mrs. Gilbert memorial window to be given at the Knickerbocker Theatre on April 17 bids fair to be particularly noteworthy for dramatic novelties. One of the most interesting announcements is the appearance of Clara Morris in a scene from the fourth act of "Odette." Among other well-known players who have volunteered their services are Francis Wilson, Lawrance D'Orsay, Annie Hughes, Blanche Bates, Margaret Illington, Frank Keenan, Ernest Lawford, and Hattie Williams and Sam Bernard in a scene from "The Rollicking Girl." Fred Walton, the English pantomime artist, will also appear.

One of the features of "The Social Whirl," which opened at the Casino last night, is a steeplechase which has its finish on the stage. Three real horses ridden by three women jump a five-foot hurdle in full view of the audience. The thing is managed without treadmills. The horses dash on to the stage in three parallel grooves or troughs, masked by lines of grass. This prevents any possible mix up before the jump. They land on a heavy, corrugated rubber mat. Apparently the race has its risk, however, if we are to credit the statement that Lloyds, who insured the horse Miss Ritchie rides, sent an agent to see the performance, with the result that they notified Miss Ritchie the following day that they could assume no further responsibility for the animal while he continued his stage career.

Among other managerial promises for next season is that of a real stock company at the Princess Theatre, with Margaret Anglin at its head and Henry Miller as stage director. In case the promise is fulfilled, Miss Anglin will open with a new play by J. Hartley Manners, not yet named. During the

MUSIC AND MUSIC MAKERS

Soloists in Chamber Music

Undue Prominence They Assume Contrary to Ideals of the Occasion.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your musical critic in his notice of the last Kneisel concert remarked that "Alfred Reisenauer, who played the piano part in Schumann's quintet, played it heavily, clumsily, unrhythmically, and quite at variance with the evident intention of Mr. Kneisel." I entirely concur in this criticism, and, judging from conversations with several friends, it expressed the general sentiment of the audience. If the Reisenauer episode were peculiar and exceptional it would be best to forget it as quickly as possible. Unfortunately his playing was typical—though perhaps extremely so—of that of the majority of assisting pianists at the Kneisel concerts.

At the concert before the last Mr. Harold Bauer showed that he had the gift and the disposition for ensemble playing, and the same may be said of the performance of Miss Aus der Ohe last season. But as a rule the eminent pianists have been incapable of self-suppression and lacking in adaptability and the sense of proportion. They have given us a species of piano obligato which does not blend with but dominates the strings, occasionally breaking out into something like the anvil chorus.

The temperament and habitual methods of a piano soloist and concert virtuoso tend to unfit him for ensemble chamber work. I have heard Mr. Reisenauer himself this season play two concertos when, with full orchestra for a background, his work was thoroughly admirable. Indeed, the memory of his rendering of a Mozart concerto still lingers as one of the most exquisite performances of its kind. Only exceptional artists of his class, however, have the faculty of subordination and merger of the piano part when co-operating with a string quartet.

During the past few seasons Mr. Kneisel has invited several distinguished composers to play the piano part in their own works—usually entailing a trial of patience and courtesy upon the audience. But these performances stand upon a different footing. A composer has not the same temptation as a mere virtuoso to accentuate his interpretative part. Moreover, the composer himself may well be allowed to assume the entire responsibility in the rendering of his own composition. With regard to classical chamber works for instruments including the piano it is heretical to permit the latter instrument to become anything but an integral and modulated participant. Some of these compositions are among the most important and enchanting in the whole range of chamber music. The Schumann quintet slaughtered last Tuesday, and the great Brahms piano quintet, are examples.

Without sacrificing the chamber music idiom, the piano supplies something of orchestral body. There is, however, the strongest reason for subjecting the piano to the authority of the leader and rigorously confining its range of volume. I submit that it is a mistake to continue to ask pianists to play at the Kneisel concerts merely because they are eminent as soloists. It is contrary to the ideals and purposes of such a body, and a concession to the spirit of vulgar virtuosity. Strictly speaking, the piano part should be played by one who has regularly practiced with the other performers for a long period and become as organically a part of their unit as the violoncellist. It is my belief that piano trios, quartets, and quintets would be much more satisfactorily rendered if the piano part was always taken by the same person, he or she being a competent, but not necessarily a great, artist.

An incidental advantage might be to give the leader of a quartet some control over the instrument used. The quality and tone of the piano, of course, have a great deal to do with the composite effect, and nowadays the instrument for any concert can be only one manufactured by the concern to which the particular virtuoso has mortgaged himself for a valuable consideration.

WILBUR LARREMORE.

New York, April 6, 1906.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.

The sixth and last concert of the Kneisel Quartet will be given in Mendelssohn Hall on Tuesday evening, April 10, at 8:15 o'clock. The programme will be as follows:

String quartet, Op. 51, No. 1, C minor.... Brahms
Quartet for piano and strings, Op. 30, A major ....Chausson
String quartet, Op. 27, G minor..........Grieg

In Chausson's Quartet the piano part will be played by Rudolph Ganz.

Brahms's Quartet will be played for the first time by Mr. Kneisel in his New York concerts. This and another one in A minor were published together in 1873 as Brahms's Op. 51, and they were his first published string quartets, though he had previously published several chamber works for other instrumental combinations. The history of this quartet is characteristic of Brahms's fastidious and relentless self-criticism. The work was finished as early as 1866, and Frau Schumann notes in her diary that he played it over to her in that year. He kept it by him, however, for polishing and revision for seven years at least. The two were played by strings first in the house of Dr. Billroth of Vienna, the famous surgeon, Brahms's intimate friend and admirer, to whom they are dedicated. The Quartet in C minor was first played by Hellmesberger in Vienna on Dec. 11, 1873.

Ernest Chausson, whose quintet is also played in New York for the first time by Mr. Kneisel, was one of the youngest French composers, pupil of César Franck, and an intimate friend of d'Indy, Fauré, Duparc, Bordes. He was born in Paris in 1855, and was killed while riding a bicycle on his estate at Limay, June 12, 1899. His family, like d'Indy's, was wealthy, and he was made to study law before he could devote himself to music. His work is not unknown here. His symphony in B flat was played in New York for the first time last December by Vincent d'Indy. His "Poème" for violin and orchestra was played here a year ago by Mr. Ysaye, and several of his songs have been sung here.

Grieg's Quartet, his only work in this form, was written, as is said by his latest biographer, Mr. Finck, "at a time when he sought rest in the country after his soul had been harrowed by heartrending experiences. 'That the natural surroundings also play a rôle in the music is self-evident,' he writes. While the first motive in the Quartet is borrowed from one of his own songs, ('The Minstrel's Song,') it is not true that, as even his Norwegian biographer erroneously states, he has helped himself to folk tunes; 'all is invented, nothing ready-made is employed,' he informs me."

THE ASCHENBROEDEL-VEREIN.

The third chamber music matinée of the Aschenbroedel-Verein will be given on Sunday afternoon, April 15, at 144 East Eighty-sixth Street, under the leadership of Sam Franko. Mrs. Adah M. Benzing, contralto, will be the soloist. Following is the programme:

Eine Klein Nacht musik in G major...Mozart
For string orchestra.
Frauen, Liebe und Leben..........Schumann
Mrs. Adah M. Benzing.
Serenade in A major, Op. 16...........Brahms
For flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns, violas, violoncellos, and double basses.

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

At St. George's Church, Stuyvesant Square, this morning there will be the annual musical event of the day, "Palm Branches," sung by Mr. Burleigh. St. George's would not be St. George's, it is said, without Mr. Burleigh and "Palms" on Palm Sunday morning. This evening there will be Stainer's "Crucifixion," with Dr. Franklin Lawson to sing the tenor solos and Mr. Burleigh the bass. Miss Roth, soprano, will sing "Love Divine All Love Excelling," with Dr. Lawson; Miss Armstrong, the alto. Minor solo work will be done by John Price, tenor, and George McCrow, bass.

There will be the procession with palms, which is a feature of the Palm Sunday service at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, this morning. The clergy and choir enter the chancel while the orchestra is playing. Taking their palms, they proceed down the north aisle of the church to the vestibule, where they rest to sing "All Glory, Laud, and Honor" with the choir in the organ loft. This choir of mixed voices sings the verses without accompaniment, while the chorus is given by the full choir of men and boys below, accompanied by the brass instruments of the orchestra. It is one of the effective musical services of the year. At the close of the hymn the procession continues up the centre aisle to the chancel, singing appropriate hymns. The mass to-day will be an arrangement from Wagner's "Holy Supper of the Apostles" and the anthem from Gounod's "Gallia." The prelude will be the "Trauer Music," by Mozart, based on the old Gregorian tones, the brass instruments of the orchestra outlining the notes of the plain song. The postlude will be the Mendelssohn Funeral March. Frank J. Chegwidden, organist and choirmaster, will be at the organ.

The music for the last of the Lenten services at the Old First Church to-day includes (organ) "Christ's Entry Into Jerusalem," Otto Malling; "Vorspiel to Parsifal," Wagner; "Lacrymosa Diesilla," (requiem,) Verdi; (choir) "Lovely Appear," ("Redemption,") Gounod; "Crossing the Bar," Barnby aria; "What Though Trials Await Me Here," from the Passion music, J. S. Bach, and "The Sands of Time Are Sinking," C. Gounod. W. C. Carl, organist. The address by the Rev. Dr. Duffield will be upon the "Praise Songs of the Church Militant."

In the upper part of the city it is to be given at St. Ann's Church, Episcopal, (St. Ann's Avenue and 140th Street,) on Friday of this week (Good Friday) at 8 P. M. Dr. Franklin D. Lawson will be the tenor and Andreas Schneider, bass. Gustav Viehl, organist.

An organist recently come to New York, who is to take an organ in an out-of-town church, is Edwin W. Breyer, formerly organist of St. Mark's Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Breyer has just returned from a trip through England and Ireland, where he has been studying the methods of boy choir training used by the organists and choir directors in different cathedrals. Mr. Breyer has been engaged since his return to take charge of the organ of St. George's Episcopal Church, Astoria, L. I., where he will go the first of May.

There is to be a service of particular interest at St. George's, Stuyvesant Square, on Easter Sunday evening. The musical part of the service has been arranged to interpret the events which the season commemorates, beginning with the Resurrection and continuing to the Ascension. Five different periods will be represented with appropriate music, this brought together in cantata form by an original recitative written by Mr. Norris, the organist, for Mr. Burleigh, St. George's well-known and much-liked baritone.

St. George's is a well-choired church. It has four distinct musical organizations of this kind. There is the large mixed choir of eighty voices, the choir of young women of forty voices, the girls' choir, and there is the probationers' choir, the boys from among whom are drawn the supplies for the working boy choir. These boys have an opportunity for practical work at some of the early communion services, and at the afternoon service of the Sunday school. At these latter services the choir of girls sings.

This junior choir of girls, 14 years and under, demure maidens in their church work, are girls living in the vicinity of the church on the east side who have been trained specially for the Lenten service singing. They wear long cassocks buttoned in front, broad cuffs, and collar of white, and a white cap not unlike a Dutch cap. They take their church duties seriously and the attendants at the Sunday school services have gained much in decorum, it has been found, since the girls' choir has begun its duties. The boys' choir also assists at these Sunday afternoon services.

St. George's choir boys have a badge of their office of which they are proud. It is called St. George's pin, a pretty Maltese cross enameled in red bearing the words, "St. George's Choir." There is an incentive to churchly manners in these pins, for the boy who has the best record for two consecutive months receives a gold pin from the organist. This is something new, and only two boys have received them so far, Master Harry Kelley and Master Harry Beeh.

The choir boys at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin have recently formed a cadet corps which marks a red letter day in their calendar. They have begun to look like soldiers only this last week, the new uniforms arriving last Monday. These are gray with black trimmings and cap. The cadet corps is drilled by Capt. C. Montgomery Budlong.

AT THE INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART.

The wide range of instruction given at the endowed Institute of Musical Art is well shown by the subjects of the special lectures given last week to the students there. There were seven special lectures and a students' recital. Thomas Tapper, Waldo S. Pratt, W. J. Henderson, and Morris Loeb lectured in their respective courses, "Music as a Culture Study," "The History of Music," "The Development of Vocal Art," and "Acoustics." H. E. Krehbiel's topic was "The Brass Instruments of the Orchestra." Prof. Dickinson of Oberlin College spoke on "The Appreciation of Music" and Robert Foresman on "Methods of Instruction in School Music." This week the students will listen to six special addresses and a recital by Arthur Hochman, piano.

This concert takes place to-night at the Hippodrome, beginning at 8:30. The introductory number will be the "Robespierre" overture, interesting in its musical depiction of scenes from the last days of the reign of terror. Interesting Sousa numbers will be the bandmaster's own suite, "Three Quotations," his collocation of American hymn tunes under the title "Songs of Grace and Songs of Glory," and finally his trumpet march "Semper Fidelis," used by the United States Marine Corps as the official march past. The closing number will be the "William Tell" overture. Three soloists will assist Mr. Sousa—Miss Elizabeth Schiller, soprano; Miss Jeanette Powers, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra will distribute at its concert this afternoon at Carnegie Hall small souvenir booklets containing a history of the orchestra's work for the three seasons of its existence and a complete set of its programmes. There will be also portraits and brief biographies of the composers whose music has been performed. It will go far toward summarizing the story of Russian music in America. The final programme will include Rubinstein's character sketch, "Don Quixote"; two numbers from the "Silhouettes" suite of Arensky, who died a month ago; Act III. of Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera-ballet, "Mlada," and Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav." The solo work will be Dvorak's concerto for violin, played by Emile Sauret. M. Sauret, it is announced will next year make his home in this city.

THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

Rebirth of a Museum

Citizens Should Help the Metropolitan, Now Engaged in Adding to and Reforming its Treasures, by Becoming Life or Annual Members.

HOW great is the change at the Metropolitan Museum since the reorganization began appears in all parts of the establishment, though it is most noticeable in the picture department, owing to the popular nature of the exhibits there. It may have failed to attract notice that the terms of the Jacob Rogers bequest expressly include the library as a sharer in the benefits of the income. The library, that mysterious place scarcely known to the public heretofore, is now made part of the exhibit, and attention is even called to it. Wood-carving, which had only a few examples in the rooms devoted to musical instruments and Japanese curios, together with some remarkable Rococo specimens in a distant corner of the museum, has been strengthened by the addition of French eighteenth century woodwork for residences. A series of painted Greek vases is another acquisition. A collection of Flemish, French, and Venetian lace has been presented by Mrs. Julian James, now of Washington. And in many other directions the knowledge of Sir Purdon Clarke in the fields of mediaeval and Oriental objects of the arts has benefited the collections by additions and rearrangements.

Paintings of uncommon excellence belonging to the old collection in Fourteenth Street, but not shown for many years, have been brought to the front by Mr. Roger Fry as worthy of better treatment, while a number of recent additions may be seen. A spacious, luminous landscape by Van Goyen, a "Saint John" by Murillo, a fine portrait of a Dutch lady by Nicholas Maes, an interesting, but not extravagantly painted likeness of one Don Sebastian Martinez by the eccentric Goya, dated 1792; a Venetian scene by Guardi and the portrait of a young Italian by Lorenzo Lotto are of the new acquisitions. An "Adoration," by Luca Giordano, and a "Holy Family," by Baroccio are among those resurrected from the oubliettes of the museum. Mr. Louis R. Ehrich has presented a picture by Carlo Cagliari, and there are purchases of works by William Blake, Puvis de Chavannes and William M. Hunt. Notable is the large cattle piece by the late Theodore Robinson, the gift of Mr. William T. Evans, which is a museum piece in size and quality.

The Metropolitan may grow quietly in exhibits, as during the past Winter, or by leaps and bounds whenever some special windfall comes its way, but more important is the new spirit of the management which offers a refreshing variation on former methods. It is a general spirit of welcome, not merely to the casual visitor who is one of thousands moving slowly through the galleries, but to the student and seeker after information. At what expense of time and trouble this attitude of courteous responsiveness must be maintained only those can appreciate who realize how many persons there are in the world ready to ask futile questions. Sir Purdon Clarke's mail is enough to give prostration of the nerves to any one less elastic in temperament. The number of people in the United States owning old pictures, not so much painted, as fearfully and wonderfully built, who demand that the Metropolitan shall buy their treasures is really astounding, and for the most part they belong to the army of those who will not be refused. Along with all this botheration goes the task of filling out the gaps and forming the exhibits anew, so as to present a more instructive sequence.

As a beginning Gallery XIV is to become in a way like the Salon Carré of the Louvre, a room where none but the best of masterpieces of painting are to hang, the finest canvases being rescued from the propinquity of inferior work and brought together in a single room where they may remain in a kind of Senatorial dignity.

At the best the hanging of pictures is only a makeshift. When passing through the galleries of the Louvre, of the National Gallery, the Uffizi and Pitti, we can never forget that each one of the famous pictures shown there has been torn from its natural environment and impaled, like a butterfly in its case, upon a wall unsuited to it, under a light which originally it was not designed to stand.

Seeing how gratefully these fine collections respond to intelligent handling it is clearly the duty of citizens to do what they can to help the work and become annual or life members of the Metropolitan Museum. The income from this source ought to be larger than it is. Those who have no objects to present may well argue that their small annual dues are serving a great purpose in helping to provide objects which artist and artisan and every one who cares for a liberal education—and what American does not?—will sooner or later have reason to enjoy.

The new wing on Fifth Avenue started this year will provide means for carrying out some of the advanced ideas of Sir Purdon Clarke and his assistants, Messrs. Robinson, Story, Fry, and others. It ought to be assumed that the grievous errors as to lighting the galleries made in the present building will be avoided, and attention will be given to the parlous question of the proper colors for walls on which paintings are to hang, as well as to the more obvious ones of ventilation and the easy circulation of crowds.

In the placing and lighting of sculpture alone there is much to do. One can hardly say that in this regard either the British Museum or the Louvre offers many examples to follow, both establishments showing for the most part a curious inability to understand the way to bring out the best points of statuary. This weakness goes back to the original architects of the buildings, who were guiltless of such subtleties. Now that we build with the distinct purpose before us to display different kinds of art works to the best advantage, it is not unreasonable to demand that the main object of a building should not be sacrificed to excellent but quite secondary considerations of external looks and architectural style.

CHARLES DE KAY.

Events in the Art Field

SIGNS of Summer come before the swallows in the field of art. The Summer schools are sending out their advance notices. Thus the school managed by Mr. Frank V. Du Mond at Lyme, Conn., announces that it will be in session from mid-June to mid-September. There will be three criticisms of work in progress each week, two for landscape and figure paintings in the open air and one for drawing and painting indoors. The Secretary is Miss M. L. Purdin, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street. The Art Students' League is more ambitious than ever this year. In emulation of the tours in Europe made by bands of students under Mr. William M. Chase, the League proposes to have a more mobile column of art students visit Holland, Belgium, and France under Mr. Louis Loeb. They propose leaving Hoboken in the Ryndam June 13, give a day to Rotterdam and a day to The Hague, two days to Haarlem, and two to Amsterdam, three to Antwerp and two to Brussels, remaining at Bruges "the dead" from July 5 to Aug. 15. During the six weeks in Bruges it is planned to make excursions to Sluis-Zeeland, Ostend, Heyst, Knocke, and Blanckenberghe. Seven days will be spent in Paris, from Aug. 16 to 22. The little army will leave Boulogne on the Noordam Aug. 24, and reach New York Sept. 3. In addition to Mr. Loeb there will be M. J. E. Benard to take charge of the art tourists as manager. His address is the Art Students' League, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street.

The Lenox Library branch of the Public Library has arranged an exhibition of etchings by Americans for the Summer months. It consists of selections from the portfolios of etchings in the Lenox, each etcher being represented by a few pieces. Mr. Weitenkampf has placed the etchers in kindred groups. Pennell, Bacher, Duveneck, Weir, Platt, Parrish, Twachtman, and Vanderhoof, for example, are shown together. Another group is composed of James D. Smillie, one of the oldest living etchers; Dr. Leroy M. Yale and R. Swain Gifford. Another group contains Thomas Moran and the late Mrs. (Mary Nimmo) Moran, Peter Moran, Mielatz, Mrs. Getshell, Mrs. Anna Lea Merritt, J. C. Nicoll, and Kruseman van Elten. The exhibition offers a general view of etching in the United States during the past forty years. It has been made possible by gifts from the artists and from collectors like the late S. P. Avery, who began life as an engraver. The library, however, contains by no means a complete collection of American etchings, and will accept with gratitude any gifts from etchers and collectors.

Old paintings, crucifixes, reliquaries, vestments, and pyxes have become so valuable that they are a great temptation to the priests of churches who have them in charge. This is particularly true of priests who know little and care less about art, having passed their life from boyhood in the narrow practice of their calling. A sad case of imposition practiced upon a venerable prelate has come to light in Kaschau, Hungary, where the cathedral has been in charge of Bishop Bubitsch, a prelate whose mind, it is said, has been weakened by age. The Bishop's Secretary and a dealer named Laszlo persuaded the Bishop that many of the art works in the cathedral and a number belonging to the private collection of the Bishop, who has been an ardent collector, were either forgeries or works of little worth. Together this worthy pair induced the Bishop to sell his own and the cathedral's old pieces at low prices, and buy forgeries at high prices to take their places. It is reported that pictures, jewels, laces, and vestments valued at $260,000 have been sold in this way at nominal prices, and then resold to art collectors. Laszlo is in prison and the Bishop has been relieved of his charge by the Government of Hungary.

The water-color exhibition now being held at the Pennsylvania Academy in the usual course has a prize of $100, called the Beck Prize, which is awarded to the best exhibit. This year it has been won by a piece of still life, an object that has remained still enough among the dead in the tombs for some 3,000 or 4,000 years. It is the water-color drawing made by Mr. Joseph Lindon Smith of a chair found by Mr. Theodore M. Davis in the tomb of Queen Tii's parents. This tomb, discovered a year ago last February, is considered one of the most important finds of recent years. The chair in question was reproduced in The Century for November from Mr. Smith's water color. He has been giving lectures on the contents of this tomb, illustrated with colored pictures on the screen. The third annual exhibition of water colors at Philadelphia will last until April 21.

Mrs. Clara Rugé, a lady who sends art news from New York to magazines of art in Austria and Germany, will deliver a lecture at the Hotel Astor to-morrow, at 8:30 P. M., on "The Evolution of Costume." It will be illustrated with pictures on the screen and living pictures. As to the latter they will be carried out by professional models belonging to the Art Workers' Club, who will be clad and posed in accordance with suggestions from Messrs. Chase, Mora, Groll, Dabo, and J. H. Fry. The lecture is under a committee of ladies, including Miss Helen S. Sargent, President of the Art Workers' Club; Mrs. Edward P. Sperry, Mrs. Arthur von Briesen, and others.

Caricaturing their fellows is one of the chosen pastimes of artists; they begin it during the most irreverent age when they are art students, and we know from the case of Puvis de Chavannes that with some the passion lingers into middle age. To-day's victim of the caricaturist is Mr. John La Farge, President of the Society of American Painters, of the Mural Painters, and other organizations.

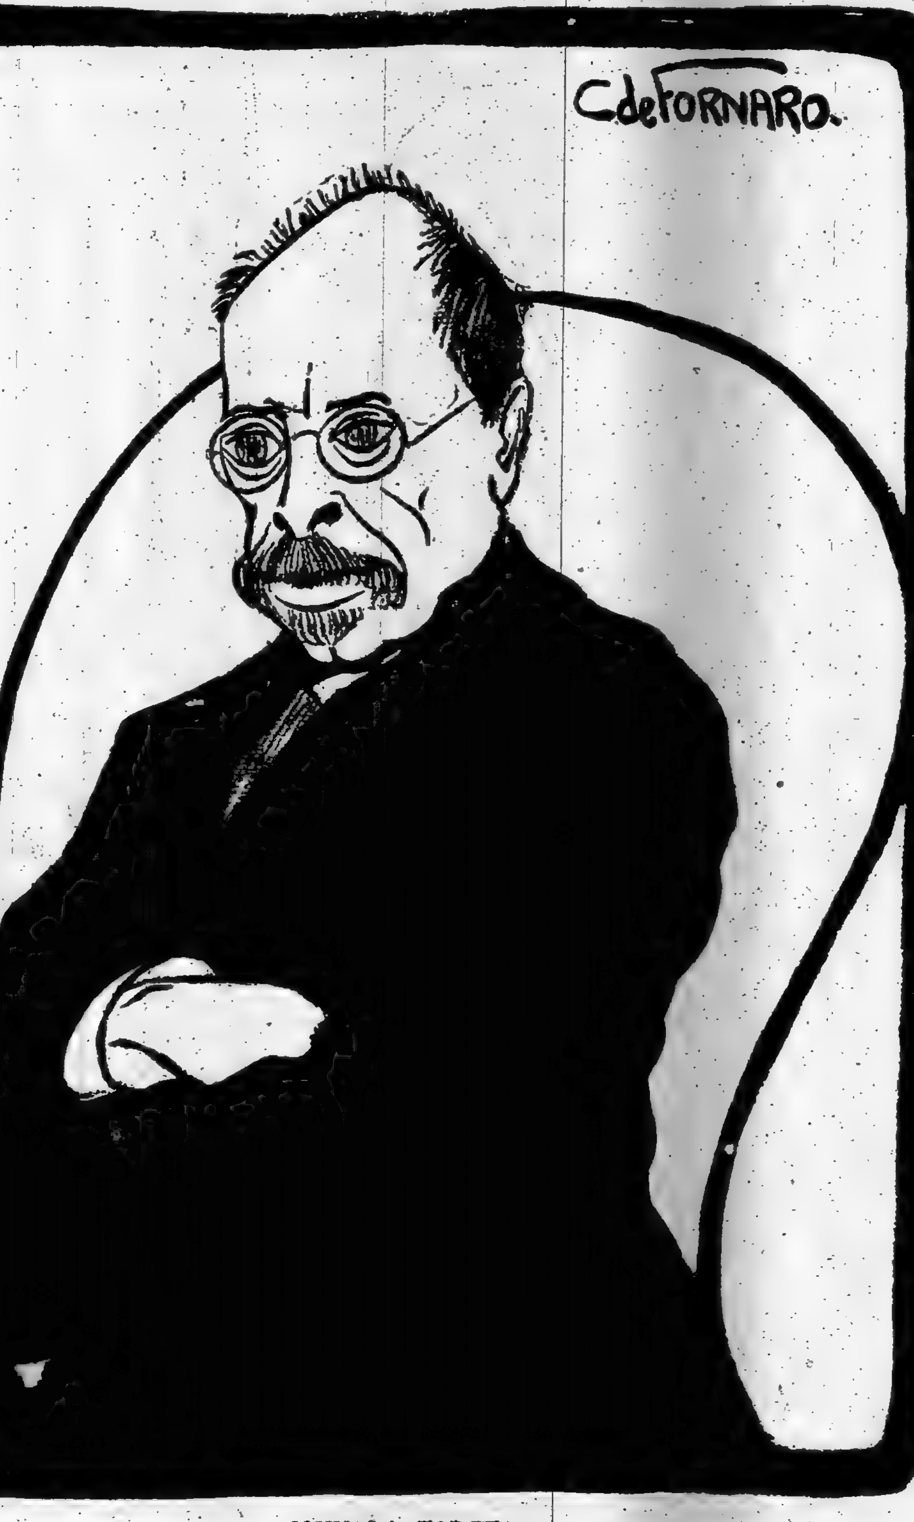
To-day and to-morrow offer the last occasions to see a number of paintings by two excellent New York artists, Messrs. George H. McCord and William H. Drake, together with miniatures by Mr. Mathias Sandor. They have been shown for some days past at the Salmagundi Club, 14 West Twelfth Street. Mr. McCord is well known for his richly toned sunset and eventide pictures, often giving views of seaports or of the Long Island Sound. Mr. Drake, like Swan of London, has made a specialty of wild beasts.



JOHN LA FARGE.

A portrait of "Ik Marvel" exhibited by Mr. Gari Melchers at the Oehme Galleries, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-first Street, is so true to resemblance and expresses so well the character of the man that it is reproduced to-day in the Pictorial Supplement. The original has a very excellent color scheme in the clothes. The rosy complexion and white hair do not detract from the richness of the canvas. It is a likeness that would look well in the Authors Club or the library of Yale University.

We reproduce in the Pictorial Supplement to-day the famous "Death of Mozart" by Michael de Munkacsy, and the same subject treated in nearly the same way by Mr. Thomas W. Shields of Brooklyn. The contention of Mr. Shields is that while he was a pupil of Munkacsy he submitted a sketch of this scene to his master, who admired and kept it. Afterward he discovered that Munkacsy had painted a death scene nearly identical. The Hungarian's conception of the figure of Mozart is more dramatic; there is more suggestion of a dying man in his than in Shields's figure, but in other respects it is not so much superior. The point is that Mr. Shields accuses Munkacsy of appropriating his idea without any acknowledgment. It would not be the first time that a master caught up and improved on the suggestion of a pupil, and in the old days the whole work of a pupil was legally the master's. Munkacsy is no longer alive to defend himself. He lost his mind many years ago, and is said to have died in an asylum.

A portrait of Mr. David Warfield in his serio-comic and pathetic rôle of the music master is on exhibition in the Knoedler Galleries. It is by S. J. Woolf.

What the Artists Are Doing

MISS A. H. ANNAN has just completed two water colors of widely varying themes which she calls "The Coming Storm" and "Afterglow." Miss Annan is devoted to one of the Canadian wildflowers that grow in the meadows around Tadousac, on the St. Lawrence, which is called by the homely name of "vetch." She has been working of late on several sketches of these rolling meadows starred with masses of these purple blooms.

Maurice Fromkes returned to New York last week after a fortnight's stay in Pittsburg, where, in addition to looking after his exhibition, he completed several pastel portraits.

Miss Mary M. Wetmore has completed a large half-length portrait of Dr. Robert Rogers of the Drew Theological Seminary, and is at work on another large portrait of a very different type, the figure being that of a small boy whom she calls "Master Carl," for exhibition purposes. In the portrait the lad is posed on a tall chair with his feet resting on the back of a Gordon setter sleeping on the floor. This canvas may be shown at the forthcoming annual exhibition of the Woman's Art Club, which opens in the galleries of the National Arts Club on April 15.

She has in her studio a portrait of a sister artist whose interesting personality is admirably reflected. It is of Miss Meta Warwick, a young colored woman of Philadelphia, who has made a reputation for herself both in Paris and in her native city as a sculptor. In Miss Wetmore's canvas the face of the original is seen to to be a very comely one, marked by intelligence and sensitiveness.

To relieve her eyes of the strain of painting miniatures, Mary H. Tannahill does an occasional water-color portrait and takes photographs, in which she combines an unusual degree of technical skill with a likeness. Two water colors that hang on the wall of her studio in the Van Dyck at present are a portrait of James A. Patteson, the figure being that of an elderly man seated on a bench with some of the fruits of the garden around him in baskets at his feet; while the other is a small study of a young woman in an old-fashioned costume of the New England of the fifties.

Talk of the Studios

THOMAS MORAN, N. A., has sold his large painting of "The Yellowstone Cañon," one of a series of four canvases of the Yellowstone, to the National Bank of Honolulu. The view is from the edge of the cañon, not far from Moran's Point, with the water falls in the distance. Mr. Moran has been going to the Western country for the past thirty-five years. He has lived among the Hopi Indians in New Mexico, penetrated the great cañons of the Colorado, and scaled the lofty heights of the snow-capped Sierras. Naturally, he has acquired innumerable sketches of the majestic region. On his easel he is completing "The Yosemite Valley," a large canvas showing the valley as viewed from Glacier Point, with the snow-tipped peaks of the Sierras in the distance, and many rounded domes scattered here and there on the mountain heights. Another picture is "A Water Pocket in Arizona," a scene not far from the Grand Cañon, with cottonwood trees silhouetted against the blue sky. An Indian girl is standing in the foreground near a pool of water with a water jar in her hands. The walls of the cañon may be seen beyond.

An interesting picture is a Hopi village built on a mesa, rising castlelike on the great plains. Storm clouds are frowning beyond the town. In the foreground are several Indians on horseback along the trail leading to the village. In certain sections of Arizona are great masses of petrified forest, of trees turned into solid agate, and not standing, but all in fallen logs. Mr. Moran has painted one of these strange phenomena, with huge pieces of timber in agate in the foreground, and the mesas rising beyond, under a dome of delicate sky. "Solitude" is the title of a picture of Colorado land in the Sawatch range. Yellow pine trees are grouped at the left; a mountain stream is bubbling down the incline over the rocks, while several snow-capped peaks rise in the distance. "Mount Moran," named after the artist, a peak 13,000 feet high in the Teton range of Idaho, is the subject of another canvas.

Mr. Moran accompanied the Government expedition which visited the Yellowstone Park in 1871 on an exploring tour. It was on this occasion that Mount Moran was named. "Tower Falls" in the Yellowstone and "Tower Creek," below the falls, are the subjects of two paintings, giving an excellent idea of the wonderful colors and rock formations in that country. Purely imaginative in character and suggested by Browning's poem, "Childe Roland," is the "Dark Tower," recalling the line "Childe Roland to the dark tower came." The tower looms up in the midst of dark clouds, while in the foreground Childe Roland is approaching on horseback. Mr. Moran usually spends a portion of his Summers at East Hampton, L. I., where he has a studio. This year instead of going westward, he will sail for England, returning to East Hampton for a sojourn in the Fall.

At a meeting of the American Free Art League, in which Robert W. de Forest is Chairman of the Executive Committee, held at the Union Club, Boston, Wednesday, addresses were made by Frank Miles Day, President of the Society of Architects of Philadelphia, and Halsey C. Ives, who was Art Director of the St. Louis Exposition. The object of the league is to secure the removal of the tariff on works of art.

Alphonse Jongers has returned to his studio in the Sherwood from a trip to Boston, where he has been completing a portrait commission. He is now giving the finishing touches to a bust portrait of Mrs. Irving Lehman, a daughter of Nathan Straus of this city.

Mr. Jongers has also just completed a three-quarter length standing portrait of Col. Schuyler Crosby. He has several other commissions in portraiture which will occupy him late into the Spring.

Exhibits will be received for the annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society up to April 21. Sargent and a number of American artists now abroad will be represented.

Henry Reuterdahl, Vice President of the Society of American Illustrators has returned to his New York studio, after a ten months' trip abroad, which included visits to Holland and England. A part of his mission thither was to invite a number of well-known illustrators of London to join the American society. These artists are Willy Sluiter, Frank Brangwyn, A. R. A.; George W. Lambert, an illustrator and genre painter; W. Hathrell, R. I., and Frank Craig, an illustrator on the staff of The London Graphic. While in Hamburg Mr. Reuterdahl made interesting sketches of the shipping and quaint, old-fashioned quarters of the city. He also made a collection of sketches of London Harbor, illustrating life there in its various phases. A commission which he is about to undertake for Collier's Magazine is to comprise a series of historical illustrations, dating back to the war of 1812, also including the civil war and the present American navy. While in London he visited a number of important art exhibitions, and was much impressed with the high character of the work displayed and the prominence given in the galleries to some of the younger school of artists, whose names are little known on this side of the Atlantic.

The thirty-ninth annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society will open to the public on May 3 in the Fine Arts Galleries on West Fifty-seventh Street. Mr. William T. Evans has offered a prize of $300 for the most meritorious water color painted by an American artist without age limitation. An effort will be made to include in the exhibition a representative collection of the work of American etchers. Members of the jury of selection are George W. Maynard, Colin C. Cooper, J. Francis Murphy, J. G. Brown, Charles C. Curran, B. West Clinedinst, Irving R. Wiles, W. G. Schneider, W. H. Lippincott, A. I. Keller, F. S. Church, and W. Merritt Post. J. C. Nicoll has been re-elected President of the society, F. K. M. Rehn Treasurer, and Carlton T. Chapman Secretary.

Miss Lillian M. Genth of Philadelphia is painting a portrait of Miss Juliet White of that city. She has several other subjects started. "In a Garden" is a large composition of two girls, one seated under trees and the other leaning against a balustrade. Another smaller canvas represents a large spreading tree with the afternoon light pouring into the garden. Miss Genth is completing a portrait of Howard Rabbay, the first violin of the Philadelphia Orchestra. She also has under way an arrangement in "Green and Gold." She is represented at the present exhibition of the Society of American Artists, and at the Society of Washington Artists in Washington, D. C. Her picture, "The Seine at Paris," shown at the recent exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, has been purchased, and is now on view at the Corcoran Art Gallery, Washington. Several of her canvases have been asked for by the committees arranging the exhibitions of the Cincinnati Art Museum, and the annual art exhibition of the museum at Worcester, Mass. She is one of the younger artists of Philadelphia, and studied with Elliott Daingerfield, New York, and was under the guidance of Whistler in Paris.

Charles Schreyvogel is putting the finishing touches to a new canvas of Western life in his studio, entitled "Protecting the Emigrants." An emigrant caravan is being convoyed over the great plains; following are a half dozen troopers, galloping along and protecting the travelers from the attack of a pursuing band of Indians, while in the distance to the extreme right another band may be seen flying over the sandy expanse of country, their object being to outflank the emigrants. The sky is a turquoise blue, while the scattering sage brush and alkali dust give evidence of the Far West.

Frank De Haven's seascape, "Dawn on the Coast of Maine," has been purchased by Dr. F. H. Boynton of this city. The light is just breaking in the eastern sky over the sea, and a morning star glimmers in the horizon eastward. On the beach a fisherman is arranging his traps preparatory for his day's occupation. Riding at anchor not far from the beach is a fishing schooner, with sails flapping in the morning breeze. Mr. De Haven has spent a number of Summers in this locality, and the work reflects the color of the picturesque Maine Coast. Another marine depicts a waterspout kicking up a turbulent sea. He spent last Fall in and around Mystic, Conn., and made frequent jaunts to Mason's Island, where he found subjects for numerous sketches. "Twilight" and "Moonrise and Sunset" were painted at Milford Valley, N. H. A landscape sketched in Pennsylvania among the hills is entitled "A Coming Shower." He may arrange an exhibition of his recent pictures some time this season.

Speaking of his Winter's work, Charles H. Davis says: "It has been a quiet but delightful grind at Mystic, Conn., away from all disturbing elements of business and controversy. I carefully mature the pictures in hand and make daily observations of the changing effects of this season, to me perhaps the most subtle and beautiful of them all."

Van Dearing Perrine has spent the entire Winter at his studio, overlooking the Palisades of the Hudson. His exhibition at the New Gallery, on West Thirtieth Street, includes these recent effects: "A Sunburst," "Bleak Winter," "Thunderstorm at Dusk," "The Sinking Moon," "Rainstorm," "Dawn—Moonlight," "The City Asleep," "An Omen of Storm," and "The Great City." These are all Winter studies. The exhibition will continue for one month.

Walter Nettleton has spent the Winter at Stockbridge, Mass. "Portal of the Grove," a Winter scene, has been purchased by the Boston Art Club with a fund devoted to that purpose, being the only recognition in the way of an award which the annual exhibition offers. Mr. Nettleton has been well represented in the various recent and current exhibitions this year, including the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburg; the Art Institute of Chicago, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the National Academy of Design, the South Carolina Art Association at Charleston, S. C., the Boston Art Club, and the Society of Washington Artists at the capital. Speaking of the past season, Mr. Nettleton says: "It has not been a favorable one for painters of Winter landscapes, but, notwithstanding this, I have been exceedingly busy and have made many studies of our New England Winter effects, and have turned out rather more than my usual average of finished pictures. These have been mostly snow effects, including a number of moonlights, in which I have taken a special interest. I have also finished a few California landscapes, studied and begun there during my stay on the Pacific Coast last Winter."

Estimates of Nocquet.

Opinions of Those Who Knew the Young Aeronaut-Sculptor Well—A Temperament Prolific in Suggestion and Ready in Expression.

AMONG the intimate friends of Paul Nocquet, the young French sculptor who lost his life in the marches of South Oyster Bay after alighting safely on Jones's Beach, is M. Pierre Feitu, also a sculptor, who has just completed a monument for the Bronx.

M. Feitu regards the death of Nocquet a great loss to sculpture, believing that he had to an uncommon degree originality and inventive genius.

"Nocquet was remarkable for his ability to express motion in sculpture. He had a vigorous talent, and it was really a pity that he should have devoted any of his valuable time to an expensive habit like ballooning."

"What is your theory of his death?"

"It came about through his wilfulness," said M. Feitu, "or shall I say his determination to 'get there?' When he found his balloon was safe he looked about for habitations, saw the lights of Amityville across the marsh and simply said: 'Ah, that is my goal, here goes!' and calmly started straight for the lights. He was a man who overrated his own powers, because when he wanted to do a thing he just did it or dropped."

M. Feitu does not think that he expected to die, and accounts for the directions written out as to the disposal of his body and belongings as a mere provision in case of something happening to him, such as being blown to sea or dashed to the ground on landing.

Mr. Gutzon Borglum perhaps has not known Paul Nocquet so long as M. Feitu, but is perhaps a closer friend, having seen more of him recently. The late exhibition of the sketches and finished work of Nocquet was held in Borglum's studio; that in itself shows a more than common sympathy between the men.

"Regarding Nocquet's art and personality," remarked Mr. Borglum, "I may say offhand that no temperament of like interest, so prolific in suggestion, so ready in expression, and so tenacious in production could easily be found among us.

"In his profession of sculptor he was a trained craftsman. He had enjoyed the friendship of the foremost men in his art, had studied under Meunier and Jef Lambeaux, and listened close to the whisperings of the muses of Rodin. He was like nearly every great man I have known of, in that he could and did work terribly. His brain drove him to tasks the Yankee could not understand and yet he was always behind his own mark. He had a merry cynicism that caused him to play and scoff, and at once doubt and believe his own most sacred ideals. He knew his limitations as he believed in his power, and his only real heartache was one that must inevitably bless every man of genius; the limitations of every form of human expression and chiefly that of his own medium. Hence the despair in much of his work."

"He had lived double time, you mean?"

"I mean that he had had many experiences in a short life and that life had to be pretty well lived out to accommodate all the experiences."

"He was still young, then?"

"He was 29, and as youthful as when I first met him at 20. He had simply accumulated more data, and this served him rather as material for play; it acted as ballast. He was called eccentric because of this, and he would fling into a company ideas we all thought but none dared speak aloud. And yet I have never known him to drop an unsavory truth into a circle with the slightest malice aforethought. If Paul Nocquet's remarks stirred to anger the dregs of a dull company it was the inalienable truth of his thrust and no personal intent.

"His loss to all of us, and to those who approve him least, is very great. We need the stimulus in America of his viewpoint now when the old school of academic formula has lost all hold upon us save a respect we grant age."

"And how do you estimate his art?"

"His productions to date are powerful, numerous, and varied. They show a wide sympathy that made us all believe in a great future, while many of his smaller pieces are prized by those who know best as masterpieces their kind."

Lenten Wedding Gowns

AMONG the beautiful Lenten wedding gowns were those worn on Thursday by the two brides of that day and their numerous attendants. The gowns worn by the brides were both possessed of individuality, and were of distinctly opposite types, the one being filmy and fluffy, the other severely rich and plain. The brides were opposite in their coloring, one being a decided blonde, and the other a pronounced brunette.

Miss Ruth Bacon, who married Austin Cheney, wore a soft, clinging robe of liberty satin flounced with filmy lace. The bodice had a round yoke and unlined stock of filmy lace, and the sleeves were full lace flounces over puffs.

Her long tulle veil was draped well back of her blonde pompadour, leaving the entire coiffure, save a narrow bit at the back, in full view. It was caught with a spray of orange blossoms. In the centre of the corsage a spray of orange leaves, and a few blossoms were fastened, these being the natural blooms. In her left hand she carried an ivory Prayer Book with a single white tulip slipped between the pages.

This bridal gown was particularly light and graceful in effect, and very youthful as well. There was a flounce drooping over the lower half of the bodice and three deep flounces formed the lower two-thirds of the trailing skirt, the train being full, round, and apparently crossed by the flounces.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Richard March Harper, who was Miss Mabel Bacon, whose wedding gown was fully described in February in these columns. Her costume was a flounced skirt and coat effect in a dull, soft, light shade of blue chiffon cloth and white lace. The body of the coat was of the chiffon. Sections of white lace laid on lengthwise formed the larger part of the coat, the blue appearing between them in stripe effects.

The skirt trailed slightly and had three flat lace flounces from ten to twelve inches wide. Under the edge of each were several flat folds of the dull blue chiffon cloth, the whole evidently being superimposed on a white slip. Both folds and flounce effects seemed to be caught down to the foundation. The coat had skirts some eighteen inches deep, and of the same length all around. The sleeves were of elbow length, finished in flat flounce effect, slightly puffed.

The upper part of the skirt was glove-fitting. The smart little hat was of some dull, very thin, light blue material. The narrow hat was rolled irregularly and pointed rather sharply at the front. The back was trimmed with flat chous of chiffon tulle and blue plumes.

The two little flower girls were Miss Elizabeth Bacon, sister of the bride, and Miss Faith Simpkins of Washington, a cousin. They wore short frocks of mull, all open work embroidery in leaf outlines. The skirts were formed of two deep flounces with pointed edges. The bodices had round yokes, and bertha frills of narrower embroidery and elbow sleeves over which flounces of the embroidery formed epaulet capes.

These gowns had yellow sashes—the church decorations were yellow Spring flowers—and their white crinoline hats were trimmed with yellow messaline ribbon wound around the crowns and tied in the front in widespreading, double bows. Their large bouquets were also tied with wide yellow ribbons.

The costumes had skirts that barely escaped the floor, and Eton coats, both being trimmed with strappings of blue silk laid on near the bottom of the skirts in Greek key patterns, the straps being perhaps three-fourths of an inch wide. These skirts had three or four inch-deep plaits, that were stitched to a point below the greatest width of the hips, the plaits then being released. There was also a group of similar tucks in the back. The skirts were tight at the top, but decidedly full at the bottom.

Whatever the underblouses were, they did not show at all save in the effect of white lace stocks and a bit of white lace where the jackets were cut away from the neck in front. They came below the top of the girdles or belt, concealing the latter all the way around. They were quite close fitting, and hung straight, the fronts meeting. Narrow strappings of blue silk went up and down the back, crossing at each side of the centre back in a Greek-key corner effect. Other strappings went around the jackets an inch or so from their edges. The sleeves came a little below the elbows and were trimmed with strappings crossing each other. A similar effect in strappings outlined the necks. Long, white gloves, over which came lace cuffs, finished the wrists. The parasols were carried against the right side, resting between the right arm and the body.

Their hats were deep cream colored or yellowish leghorns, almost small enough for toques. They were rolled at both sides, forming a modified point in the front, with a wide, round effect at the back. Blue tulle was box plaited across the back to form a cachepeigne. At the right side, where the rolled brim was slightly indented against the crown, stiff, light blue wings standing up and slanting the least bit backward were fastened. The left sides were plain.

Mrs. Gorham Bacon, the bride's mother, was in gray chiffon gauze, laid in lengthwise plaits and trimmed around the bottom with medallions of black lace and black ribbon in stripe effects. Her white toque was trimmed with black and white tips.

Miss May Valentine Johnson, now Mrs. Wyatt Warner Taylor, wore a heavy pure white satin gown, forming a marked contrast to her black hair and eyes. Like Miss Bacon she is slight in figure. Her bridal gown had a wide, round train, and about the bottom of both skirt portion and train were three folds of the satin, one nearly four inches wide, the one above it perhaps three, and then came one about an inch wide. Otherwise the skirt portion was plain. The gown was a princess with Empire touches. It was fitted in at the waist line, and over the hips and up to the bust line were quarter-inch tucks a quarter of an inch apart.

The top of the robe was satin with medallions of lace, and there was a ruffle effect in lace across both the front and the back, this being crossed in the front by shaped sections of the satin, piped and crossed in a curious but attractive fashion—at least this was the effect.

In the centre back, just below this ruffle, was a short, double bow of crisp, lustrous ribbon, with two wide, long ends that fell nearly to the floor.

The sleeves were stiff puffs of satin that stood up from and out from the shoulders, and were shirred tight in several rows just above the elbows, with smaller but prominent puffs over the elbows, finished by a stiff, double ruffle effect in satin, with point lace ruffles inside them.

Her tulle veil was arranged at the edges in three flat folds, matching the finish, probably not intentionally, of the skirt. They crossed the fronts and extended along the sides to a point back of the ears, being caught at short intervals with orange blossoms. This veil was a voluminous one and spread very much at the sides, whereas Miss Bacon's was brought close and did not spread any to speak of until it got to the waist line.

Mrs. H. J. Hildebrand, the matron of honor, was in white liberty satin, with tapering panels outlined with medallions or embroidery in satin, with yoke and full sleeves showing the embroidered medallions. She wore no hat, nor did any of the attendants, for, although it was a church wedding, it took place in the evening at one of the Fifth Avenue churches.

The maid of honor, Miss Bessie Taylor, a sister of the bridegroom, was in a dotted white net and lace frock. The skirt trailed a little and had a deep flounce at the bottom; the fullness in sunray plait effect was finished at the bottom with a ruche. There were several more narrow ruffles headed by ruches between them. The skirt was tucked around. These ruffles stopped below the hips and the upper part was fitted by lengthwise tucks.

The bodice was tucked and had a narrow bertha ruffle of lace. It also had a high lace stock; both stock and yoke were lined. The sleeves were scant puffs of lace. The gown had a satin girdle with long ends.

The bridesmaids, the Misses Elizabeth Pearsall, Ethel Lockwood, Ilona Miglietta Francis Jenkins, Katherine Daniell, and Thérése Mathews were in elaborate robes of white batiste rich in embroidery over pink taffeta.

They were princess robes, fitted to the figure by tucks above, below, and at the waist line, and just below the bust line in the centre front of each was a short, full, double bow of soft pink silk ribbon. From this bow, soft, crushed streamers were carried under the arms, midway between the armholes and the waist line, around to the back, where they were raised slightly to the exact centre and there tied in bows, with streamers falling nearly to the hems and edges of the skirts.

The stocks were of open work embroidery on batiste. The sleeves of embroidered batiste had ruffles falling over them, forming capes to them, and the sleeves themselves ended at the elbows, finished with ruffles of the embroidery.

All through the skirts below the tucks were embroidered oval medallions with open work embroidery. There were flounces at the bottom, through the arrangement of the embroidery, and the bottom of each robe had inserted under its embroidered edge a ruching of wash net or something of that sort.

The bodices had embroidered ruffles across the front, but these were draped into the figure. The attendants carried armfuls of pink Bridesmaids' roses.

Mrs. Gilbert H. Johnson, the bride's mother, wore a decolleté white lace gown, very simply made, with round bodice, elbow sleeves, and white girdle. Two flat sections, shaped like ruffles, only flat, were laid around the bottom of a fluffy skirt. These satin sections were edged with something in the way of lace braid or lace.

One of the latest fancies is the use of the very wide liberty ribbons arranged as fichus with very long ends. For this purpose the widest ribbons are used, some of them being printed with exquisite flowers, large roses being the favorites. The narrower, but still wide, ribbons are used for girdles, nearly every gown having its girdle.

The pony coats are not destined for the woman of fashion. They have been turned out in quantities for the ready-made trade, and, while many fashionable women purchase the ready-made gowns of the smart shops devoted entirely to women's clothing, they select exclusive styles and pay high prices. The pony coat goes with cheap costumes and has lost whatever cachet it ever possessed. Women and girls who have them will continue to wear them for shopping and walking, but they are a good thing to avoid by the woman of small purse who wishes to be smartly clad, but who can have but one costume where her wealthy friend has a dozen.

Another fashion started in Paris is of combining plaided skirts with jackets of a plain color matching one of the colors—usually the darker—in the plaid. This is a fashion bound to be ephemeral and one trying to any but tall, thin figures. Last Summer a few women coming from abroad wore skirts of shepherd plaids with plain coats matching the dark color of the check. Mrs. John Jacob Astor had one in dark green and white topped by a small dark green coat matching the green in the skirt, and a few others were noted.

The plaids, however, are quite different from the tiny shepherd check, and the effect is altogether different. When, however, money is no object and a love of variety present, one of these mixed costumes will come in very well for knockabout wear.

Plaited skirts, including the accordion and sunray plaits, are still worn in Paris and will be—and are—here and are always graceful. They seem to be as lasting in fashion as the ever-present Eton jacket and are a wise investment for economical women.

Speaking of Eton jackets recalls the fact that long coats, save in the fancy French affairs for formal dressing, are not being made up at all save for shopping, morning wear, and traveling. They are inappropriate to warm wear, when their greater weight is burdensome.

In Etons the short variety, coming barely to the top of a wide girdle, or just over it, lead, and nearly every one is made that way. In nearly every costume for no matter what occasion there is some sort of jacket or bolero or coat in effect, if not in reality.

A decidedly new touch is the draping of full sleeves back on the bodice at their top, so that they seem to be a part of the corsage drapery rather than sleeves.

In Paris the short skirts are very short, while the long ones trail around the feet in the usual distressing Parisian fashion—distressing to the wearer, I mean, for in the house trailing skirts are infinitely more graceful and artistic than the short ones.

One Parisian house is showing a new fichu effect in the wide flowered ribbons mentioned above. Some of these ribbons are drawn down over the corsage and under the wide belt, and in the back the ends extend several inches below the waist line, forming coat tail effects that are distinctively chic.

In other examples the ribbons are fastened quite high in the centre back and are then draped to form a graceful cascade effect, ending in long trailing ends falling to the hem of the skirts. These fichus are becoming to those whose shoulders are too high and square, as they give the drooping shoulder effect.

Ribbons are being used in quantities not only to trim gowns, but for millinery purposes, and never have ribbons been better in variety, suppleness of weave, and beauty of coloring and design.

One Parisian house uses ribbons of liberty satin to trim many of its skirts. These ruffles are often put on in curved lines or serrated points, while others are straight. In many cases these come to the knee line—some above it.

A Parisian novelty is the décolleté dinner coat in silver and gold gauze. Sometimes it is entirely of one or the other; in other instances the foundation is of the one material embroidered in the other, and trimmed with tassels of the trimming matching material.

Many tunic skirts are found in the new Spring models. In these the underslip is severely tight, and the jupe extends down over the edge of the lower section only a short distance, so that the skirts are no more bulky or warm than if made in the single fashion. Long, loose evening coats for warm weather will be made, or rather are in process of making, that possess decided novelty. They are made in cottons of the nature of crêpe, really a cotton crepon, and they are elaborately trimmed with craponette lace or embroidery, or both, and by no means inexpensive, though they be of cotton.

Full, much trimmed skirts, more's the pity, promise to be quite the vogue. That they are patchy, tend to shorten, and are lacking in artistic merit, will count for little. They are profitable to make, because they take time and skilled labor, and there is an opportunity to add materially to the bills in making up charges. Nevertheless women who interest themselves personally in designing their frocks will prefer the plainer skirts and insist upon their being made as they desire.

In trimmings there are hand-crocheted linen buttons, linen-covered buttons, and plain and engraved pearl buttons for linen and other lingerie frocks. White crochet buttons may be purchased that will launder beautifully.

A novelty in braids is the revival of the old-time Hercules, which, it seems, must have been forgotten. This, however, will not be used to any great extent until next Autumn.

Pearl slides in all sizes, the large ones for belt buckles and the smaller for fastening ends of braid or decorating bow centres, will be a feature of Summer trimmings.

Beautiful buttons in artificial stones set in metal rims are exceedingly handsome for certain garments. These are usually rimmed with rhinestones, and the mauves and yellows, topazes and amethysts, are especially good. Many are in Japanese effects.

Some of the handsome cabochons are flat with enameled centres showing tiny figures of women arrayed in old-time fashions. These are set in rhinestone rims. Cabochons of this design adorned the Venetian point gown worn by Mrs. Grant B. Schley at the marriage of her daughter, Miss Evelyn Schley, to Max Howell Behr.

Personal and Otherwise.

MISS JEAN REID, an excellent picture of whom may be seen in the Pictorial Section, is the only daughter of our Ambassador to England, Whitelaw Reid, and Mrs. Reid. Her full name is Jean Templeton Reid. Miss Reid, who is an unassuming young girl, made her début some three seasons ago at a dance given by the Reids at their town house, 451 Madison Avenue. This house forms one of the four that were built years ago by Henry Villard, who intended to occupy the whole building. He had to part with it, however; the original plans were modified and four houses instead of one was the result. These houses form three sides to a square that shows green turf all the year around, save when covered with snow. The real home, however, of the Reids is Ophir Farm, at White Plains, one of the show places of the United States.

Miss Reid is of middle height, slight, with gray-blue eyes, hair of a brown medium shade, and a fine pink and white complexion. She is extremely shortsighted and often wears pince nez, for she cannot see any distance without them, in this respect resembling her mother, who is also very short of sight. She is a niece of Ogden Mills, being a granddaughter of D. O. Mills, among whose good works are the Mills Hotels, and is a cousin of the Misses Beatrice and Gladys Mills and Ogden Mills, Jr. She has one brother, Ogden Mills Reid.

Miss Reid is fond of outdoor life, is accomplished, and extremely popular among both the younger and older sets in society.

Miss Helen McGuire is one of the daughters of Mrs. Thomas McGuire of West Fifty-eighth Street, one of whom married Joseph D. Forbes, and another Munson Gallaudet Shaw, a grandson of the famous Dr. Gallaudet. One of her brothers married Grace Kimball. Miss McGuire is a distinctly Gibson type of girl as to figure, being extremely tall and straight, but not as to face, which is mobile and full of expression, with blue eyes framed in masses of rich brown hair. She was educated at a convent in Paris. Her marriage to Charles William Earle of this city is set for April 30, at the residence of her mother. Mr. Earle was educated in England, where he spent many years. He Blight, eldest daughter of Atherton Blight of Philadelphia and Newport and occasionally of New York. She is a sister of Mrs. William Payne Thompson, of Miss Evelyn Blight, and a granddaughter of Richard Greenough, the noted sculptor. Mrs. Lowther was always considered one of the handsomest women in New York and Newport, and was greatly admired abroad, the Blights regularly spending several months of each year in Europe. With brown hair and eyes, a statuesque figure and features, she dressed with much taste. Her engagement was rumored from time to time to various New Yorkers, and on several occasions to Mr. Lowther, who at one time was attached to the British Embassy in Washington. The notice of her engagement came from abroad nearly two years ago. It was speedily followed by her marriage to Mr. Lowther, and they at once went to Tangier to make their returned to this country about two years ago.

Mrs. Wyatt Warner Taylor, whose picture appears in the Supplement, was a bride of Thursday, and was Miss May Valentine Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert H. Johnson of Spuyten Duyvil. She is a graduate of Miss Brown's School. Mr. Taylor was graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University in 1900. He is a grandson of Mrs. Thomas R. Hunter of Newport and nephew of William R. Hunter and Mrs. W. Rogers Morgan of Newport, and a son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Taylor, formerly of Stamford. The wedding was not only a Lenten one, but took place in the evening at the Collegiate Marble Church, and was followed by a reception at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Mrs. John Nesbitt Conyngham is a daughter of Mrs. J. Hood Wright by her first husband, and is a sister of Edward Moore Robinson of Philadelphia and of William Moore Robinson of Paris.

Mrs. Gerard Lowther was Miss Alice home, Mr. Lowther representing the British Goverment there. He has held many diplomatic positions. Mrs. Lowther has not been here since her marriage, but her photographs would indicate that she is handsomer than ever.

Society at Home and Abroad

PALM Sunday and Holy Week bring rest and quiet and absence of all social functions. Lent has not been altogether dull. The Viscountess Maitland was able last week to get together a small gathering of young people for a fancy dance in a studio, an entertainment postponed from last January. For the rest, there has been a round of cards, of sewing classes, of dinners, and of parties to the circus and the play. During the coming week, there will be a cessation of the sewing class afternoons, and it is considered bad form to be at home or to give dinners until after Good Friday. Society, taking advantage of the holiday, will go to the country and remain there until after Easter. Then for a fortnight or more there will be a mild repetition of the gayeties of the Winter. There are to be a number of small dances, the much-exploited Crinoline Ball, for which numerous hostesses will give dinners; bridge parties, dinners, and many weddings.

Last week several "farewell" bachelor dinners were given. A week from Easter Monday, the coaching season begins. The whips will be Alfred Vanderbilt, Robert Gerry, and William Goadby Loew. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Rives are going abroad for the Summer. Their daughter, Miss Rives, who is a year younger than her cousin, Miss Prescott Lawrence, makes her début next Winter. Mr. Rives, who has always been the whip on the first trip of the Pioneer, will not take an active part in coaching this season. Center Hitchcock has the coach for the first trip. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt will come to town from Newport this week. They are thinking of taking a house at Ardsley during the coaching season. Later on the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club will have its annual parade. They are practicing in Central Park these fine Spring mornings. Mrs. Arthur Iselin will act as President this year. Mrs. Thomas Hastings went abroad a week ago. She is to visit a famous specialist for deafness, with which she has been afflicted this year.

Retreats at the different convents, sermons, and religious lectures will take up the week in town. Easter breakfasts, which are one of the fads of recent years, will be given by several hostesses, but the short season proper will not begin until Monday.

Each day new engagements are announced and new arrangements made for the Spring weddings. Notwithstanding the many European attractions, the incoming ships are bringing returning tourists and visitors. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll are among those who are paying a visit to this country, the first in several years. Mrs. Charles Carroll was Miss Nannie Bancroft, a great belle and descendant of the famous historian. She was born and brought up at Newport. For some years Mrs. Charles Carroll has been one of the most notable of the American hostesses in Paris and on the Riviera. Mrs. George Law was another arrival. Again and again she has been reported engaged to some titled foreigner, but all these rumors have been denied. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., reached home on Tuesday. They will pass the early Spring and Summer at their place on Long Island. Among the foreigners is Lady Evelyn Moncrieffe, the wife of Sir Robert Drummond Moncrieffe. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Weatherbee and Miss Weatherbee were among those who sailed yesterday for Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Clark Potter Read have returned from the Pacific Coast and are in New York for the present.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor are among those who have returned from the West Indies. They have been making a long cruise in the Wanderer. They will go abroad later. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt are expected shortly on the North Star. They have been to Cuba and Mexico. The Vanderbilt children are at Tuxedo. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson have been absent from their Fifth Avenue house making visits in the South. Among those returning from the South were Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Lehr, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Miss Mabel Gerry, and Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones.

The dances to be given after Lent will, with the exception of the cotillion at which Miss Frelinghuysen will make her début and the Crinoline Ball, all be informal. They will be crowded into the two weeks following Easter. Among those who will give large bridge parties are Mr. and Mrs. Lester del Garcia, who have cards out for one at the Waldorf-Astoria. The different bridge classes which have been stopped by Holy Week will be resumed, and until society begins to go to the country in May, there will be a succession of these entertainments. There will not be much of a season at Meadow Brook. The races at Belmont Park now take the place of other sports, and there will be daily trips to the club and dinners and luncheons there during the season. Summer plans at present are a bit chaotic. Each year the ball is set a-rolling at Newport a little later, and although there will be many villa owners and cottagers settled in their Summer homes there will be no general entertaining until August. Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will be at Garrisons until quite late, and the colony there will be very gay indeed during April, May, and June.

When many of the travelers return—and, as already stated, they are beginning to come back in shoals—there will be a little spirit of informal entertaining in town before the dead-lock of Summer sets in. Society will be present for the wedding of Miss Cynthia Roche and Arthur Scott Burden. It is said that the place will be St. Bartholomew's and the date June 21. Mrs. Roche and her daughter are now abroad. They will be in Paris during May. Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt will join them there. She sailed a fortnight ago. As yet the names of the bridesmaids and ushers have not been announced. Naturally the list—if Miss Cynthia does not change her intention and have no "attendants"—will be made up of the young women who have been with Miss Roche at Newport, and the ushers will be those who are in the Gerry-Burden-Vanderbilt set. The Misses Mills will be abroad, but Miss Gladys Vanderbilt may return by the time arranged for the nuptials.

Several interesting engagements were announced last week. One of these, however, was premature, and the parties interested are busy in making denials. This was the one which concerned a charming young Western widow, who has been a notable success abroad, and a confirmed bachelor of Westchester. An interesting engagement is that of Miss Margaret Hoffman Hackstaff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ludovic Hackstaff, and Albert Gallatin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Gallatin. Mr. Gallatin is a brother of Mrs. Howland Pell. Miss Hackstaff is a granddaughter of the late Dean Hoffman of the General Theological Seminary. She was introduced in society three years ago. Mr. Gallatin's mother was Miss Amy Gerry. The engagement has also been announced of Miss Margarette Woodhull of Freehold, N. J., to Eugene Delafield, son of Mrs. Maturin Livingston Delafield. Miss Woodhull is a daughter of John T. Woodhull. Among the brothers and sisters of Mr. Delafield are Maturin Livingston Delafield, Jr., John Ross Delafield, Edward C. Delafield, Mrs. Frederick W. Longfellow, Miss Mazie Delafield, and Miss Harriet Delafield, who is to marry Jarvis Pomeroy Carter.

The engagement announced in the latter part of the week was that of Miss Anna Elizabeth Kip, daughter of George Goelet Kip of Morristown, to Paul Olmstead, son of Bishop Charles Olmstead of the Diocese of Colorado. Miss Kip's father is a cousin of the Goelets. Another engagement is that of Douglas C. Vernam, son of William Spencer Vernam, to Miss Mary Imogene Kelly of Fordham.

The dancing season will end with a fancy dress ball for the younger set. Mrs. Augustine N. Lawrence and Mrs. Howard Gilder will be among the patronesses. The date is April 27 at Delmonico's. Even at that time some of those who have come to town for the Easter holidays will not have departed for school and college. The Easter, like the Christmas, tide is a joyous and anxious season for parents. Many entertainments will be given for the juniors during the next fortnight.

Each day marks new arrangements for the weddings of the next month. As a rule, there are not to be many bridesmaids. The fashion differs much from that which prevails in England, where eight and ten, and a dozen even, are selected. Next Saturday evening Louis Starr second, whose marriage to Miss Margaret Hammond, a sister of John Henry Hammond, is set for April 17, will give his bachelor dinner, and on the same date Clarence Wyckoff, who is to marry Miss Esther Tomlinson on April 18, will have a similar entertainment at Delmonico's.

The date of the wedding of Miss Helen McGuire to Charles William Earle has been fixed. It is on April 30, at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Thomas McGuire.

The wedding day of Miss Mignon Critten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. De Freece Critten, and Representative Swager Sherley of Kentucky will be Saturday, April 21, at the home of the bride's parents, Olivecrest, Grymes Hill, S. I. Miss Marjorie Critten will be maid of honor. There will be no bridesmaids. Henry Clifford Smith of Louisville, Ky., will be best man, and the ushers William Mars, Richard Ely, Samuel Bland, John Lorey, and Avery Robinson. Miss Critten and Representative Sherley were members of Secretary Taft's Philippine excursion.

On April 25 Miss Josephine Russell will be married to the Rev. David Brewer Eddy of the Presbyterian Church, East Orange, N. J. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Russell. The maid of honor will be Miss Marie L. Russell, a sister of the bride, and the bridesmaids the Misses Emily H. Mann of Troy, N. Y., a niece of Hamilton Fish, and Harriet Sabin of Williamstown, N. Y. L. G. Billings will be best man. The ceremony will take place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Russell, 47 Park Avenue. There will be no reception after the ceremony, as the bridegroom, who is a nephew of Judge Brewer of the Supreme Court of the United States, is in mourning. A dinner for the bridal party will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Russell on April 23.

The wedding of Miss Harriet Coleman Delafield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maturin Livingston Delafield, and Jarvis Pomeroy Carter, son of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Skelton Carter, will take place on April 28 at the Church of the Heavenly Rest. Miss Mazie Livingston Delafield will be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Grace Floyd Delafield, a cousin; Hopeton D. Atterbury, Justine B. Erving, and Florence Bates. Russell F. Carter will be best man. A small reception will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Delafield, 17 East Thirty-sixth Street, after the ceremony.

A wedding of much interest to New Yorkers will be that of Harry Parsons Cross of this city to Miss Virginia Gammell of Providence, R. I. Miss Gammell has been a visitor in New York and at Newport. Miss Gammell is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ives Gammell, and a niece of Lady Herbert, the wife of Sir Arthur Herbert, the British Minister to Norway, and of Mrs. T. Shaw Safe. The wedding takes place at Providence on April 18. Mr. Cross gives his dinner at the Agawam Hunt on Easter Monday. He is a widower. There will be no best man, nor will there be any bridesmaids. The ushers will be Robert H. I. Goddard, Jr., William Gammell, Jr., Theodore F. Green, and Howard Gray of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Cross will live in Providence.

Cards have been received in New York for the wedding in New Orleans of Miss Mary Alice Stauffer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Stauffer, and Lewis Hall Hardie of that city. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride's parents on Jackson Avenue on April 21, and will be followed by a reception. Miss Stauffer is a great-granddaughter of the late Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States, and a granddaughter of the late Gen. Richard Taylor, who after the civil war lived in New York. Her mother was Miss Betty Taylor. Miss Stauffer is also a niece of Mrs. George Eastwick, who was Miss Celeste Stauffer.

Lieut. Commander John H. Gibbons, who is to marry Miss Ely, sailed last Monday on the White Star steamship Teutonic from Liverpool. He may arrive to-day. The wedding will be quiet, only intimate friends and relatives being present at the ceremony. Commander and Mrs. Gibbons will at once sail for Europe, and go to London, where the bridegroom is connected with the American Embassy.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney have let their place at Westbury to Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Collier. Mrs. Beverley Robinson has also joined the Westbury colony, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ellis have taken the Herbert Harriman cottage. Mr. and Mrs. Harriman are still at Aiken. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney will be at Newport for a part of the Summer. They also go abroad. Oliver H. Payne is shortly to sail in his yacht, taking a party with him, including Henry L. Dimock.

The wedding of Miss Ella de Ruyter and Augustus Drum Porter, on Easter Monday, will be a small affair. It will take place at the home of Miss de Ruyter's sister, Mrs. Moses Taylor Campbell. Mr. Porter is well known in Philadelphia society. His uncle is Brig. Gen. Richard C. Drum of Washington. Thomas Dolan of Philadelphia will be the best man at the wedding.

Another wedding of Easter week will be that of Miss Margaret Mynderse to Alfred Huger. It will take place on April 17, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelmus Mynderse, on Joralomon Street, Brooklyn. The Bishop of Long Island will officiate. The bridesmaids will include Miss Mary Douglas Bosworth, Miss Christina Whitehouse of New York, Miss Caroline Huger of South Carolina, and the Misses Marie L. Abbott, Caroline Squibb, and Alice Dalol of Brooklyn. Rutledge Parker of Charleston will be best man, and the ushers George H. Turner of New York, Frank R. Blair of Boston, James Chesnut of Charleston, Norman J. Gould of Senaca Falls, Thomas S. Chalmers of Chicago, and W. Mynderse Rice of Auburn. The Huger family is one of the most historic in South Carolina. A cousin of Alfred Huger, Miss Meta Huger, lives in New York. On her mother's side she was a near relative of Mrs. William Schermerhorn. The Mynderse family has been known on Long Island for generations. Among the ushers will be Rutledge Parker, a descendant of one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, and James Chestnut, a relative of Mrs. Chesnut, whose book of memories of the war, lately published, has been one of the most interesting of the year.

Washington has been a Mecca for many New Yorkers during the past fortnight. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet were there last week, and were the recipients of much hospitality. Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont have had a house party, entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Jules J. Vatable, August Belmont, and Miss Cameron. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth are to go abroad in May and are to visit the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough at Blenheim. Earl Grey, Lady Grey, and their daughter and Lady Alexandra Beauclerck, daughter of the late Duke of St. Albans, have been there also, coming from New York. Mrs. John Jacob Astor arrived a few days previously from Aiken from a visit to Mrs. Lewis Thompson. Her luncheon in honor of Lady Grey and her daughter was one of the events of the week in town.

Mr. and Mrs. George Gould will spend the Easter holidays at Georgian Court. They go abroad in June. It is possible that Miss Marjorie Gould will make her début next Winter, although her mother may wait for another year. Miss Gould has been at some of the smaller dances for the younger set not out in society. From all indications there will be even more débutantes next year than there were this Winter. Family mourning interfered with a great many plans. Miss Alexander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, will be another of the buds. Mrs. Alexander will pass the early Spring at Tuxedo.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Phelps Dodge were among the arrivals from Europe on Thursday. Miss May Dodge, a sister of Miss Grace Dodge, who has lived abroad for a number of years, is visiting in New York. With her is Miss Schreiner, who is a first cousin of Miss Julia Van Duzer and a great-niece of the poet, William Cullen Bryant. Mrs. Van Duzer, Miss Van Duzer's mother, died a short time ago. Miss Schreiner some years ago made a great sensation in New York by her beauty and chic. She paid a short visit here and returned to Europe.

Lady Graham Montgomery, the Hon. C. Stanhope, Sir Alexander, and Lady Hargreaves Brown were among the arrivals on the Carmania on Wednesday. Sir Alexander Hargreaves Brown is a son of the late Alexander Brown of Beilby Grange. He has a seat in Dorking and a town house in Grosvenor Gardens, London. He married Miss Blandy of Madeira. Lady Graham Montgomery is the wife of Sir Basil Templer Graham Montgomery of Kinross. The Hon. Charles Stanhope is a son of the late Earl of Chesterfield. His brother, the present Earl, married the famous beauty, Miss Enid Wilson.

The Vanderbilts abroad—with the exception of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt—are in Florence at present. Mrs. William D. Sloane and Mrs. Twombly and Miss Twombly are to arrive in Paris on Easter and remain there for a few weeks before sailing for this country. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Osgood Field are to be at Lenox in May, and later Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sloane will join them there. Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt are to go to Paris by the end of May. They will sail in the early Summer for home.

Although it is early in the season, several of the Newporters are already at their villas. Mr. and Mrs. W. Watts Sherman and the Misses Sherman are among these. Mr. and Mrs. De Lancey Kane are also at their home, where they will remain a great part of the Summer. Mrs. Woodbury Kane and her sons have been at Aiken during the month of March.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Whiteridge have returned from Washington, where they were entertained by the President at the White House. They will sail early next month for Europe, stopping in England a short while before going to Spain for the wedding of Princess Ena and King Alphonso. Mrs. Whiteridge will bring out her second daughter next Winter. The appointment of Mr. Whiteridge as special representative of the President at the Spanish wedding is an excellent one. Both Mr. and Mrs. Whiteridge have many friends in Madrid. While in England Mr. and Mrs. Whiteridge will be entertained by Mrs. Humphry Ward, who is a cousin. The Autumn will be passed in Scotland.

Mrs. Alexander Van Nest has gone abroad to visit her daughter, Mrs. Barney, and therefore cannot be present at the marriage of her half-brother, Mr. Varnum, to Mrs. Charles Ingersoll. Mrs. Van Nest was a Miss Taylor. Her mother was married twice, her first husband being Mr. Varnum. Mrs. Richard Gambrill has returned from the South and has been entertaining this past week.

Among the guests will be Percy R. Pyne, Le Grand Cannon Griswold, R. Lawrence Benson, and Frederick W. Stelle of New York; Edwin N. Benson, Jr., Frederick Rosengarten, and Carroll S. Tyson, Jr., of Philadelphia; Harold L. Walton of Orange, N. J.; W. F. Wicks of Chicago, and Dr. F. C. Goldsborough of Baltimore.

London is practically deserted. The King is on the Continent, and he and the Queen are going on a yachting trip to end in Greece, where there is to be a quiet family gathering of the children of the late King of Denmark. Owing to Court mourning, the first Drawing Room will not be held until May 25. The second Court at Buckingham Palace will be on June 1. This will be the day before the wedding of the King of Spain and Princess Ena of Battenberg at the Church of San Geronimo, Madrid. According to present arrangements, none of the royal family except perhaps one of the Connaught Princesses and maybe the Duke and Duchess of Connaught will be present. Derby Day is May 30, and Ascot week begins June 19.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor has taken a London house, her tenantcy to begin in May. Seaford House, one of the great houses in London, has been let for the season, furnished, to Mr. Winans, whose daughter and son-in-law were at Newport for a short time last year. Seaford House belongs to Lord Howard de Walden, and is as famous as Dorchester House, now let to Whitelaw Reid, the Ambassador at St. James's.

Mrs. Potter Palmer has been in Rome. She will return to Hampden House, which she has let for the season, after Whitsunday. Cora, Lady Strafford, has been again suffering with her knee, and she and her husband, Mr. Kennard, are in London with Miss Colgate, who is her daughter by her first marriage. Mrs. Arthur Paget is to undergo another small operation on her knee. Miss Fanny Reed, her aunt, has been all this Winter in New York, and has had a number of entertainments given in her honor.

Lady Cunard has taken the residence of Lady Sarah Wilson, 31 Grosvenor Square, for the London season. She has emerged from her mourning for her mother and is to entertain. According to latest advices, no definite plans had been made for the Astor-Shaw wedding. It is to take place some time this month. An engagement of interest to Americans is that of Miss Ivy Gordon Lennox to Lord Villiers. Miss Gordon Lennox is the daughter of Lady Algernon Gordon Lennox, who was in New York two years ago, and a niece of the present Duke of Richmond. Lord Villiers is the Earl of Clarendon, a widower with grown children, including a married son, who is Lord Hyde. Miss Gordon Lennox is hardly twenty years of age. The late Countess of Clarendon was Lady Caroline Elizabeth Agar, daughter of the third Earl of Normanton.

George Lorillard, who has been appointed to a diplomatic post in Brazil, is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. Lorillard of Newport. His mother was Miss Beekman. His elder brother married a few years ago Miss Doyle of Asheville. Louis Lorillard inherited the villa of his relative, the late Miss Katherine Wolfe, at Newport. He sold it to Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly. He was a brother of the late Pierre Lorillard and of Mrs. Kernochan and Mrs. Henry Barbey.

The Social Whirl

A NOVELTY in the way of a luncheon was given on Thursday in the Pergola of the Hotel Algonquin, 53 West Forty-fourth Street. The hostess was Mrs. John H. Judge. By a generous use of pink carnations and ferns an out-of-door effect was gained. The luncheon was served at small tables, and instead of the guests progressing, as they often do, the hostess progressed. The favors were fans and opera bags. There was music, and a number of short speeches were made by some of the guests. Those invited were Mesdames M. J. Belling, Olin D. Gray, George Washington Wallace, Arthur Elliot Fish, Charlotte Wilbur, Philip Carpenter, George Perkins Lawton, Philip Crovat, Edward Addison Greeley, William Henry Oakley, Anna Truax McBride, Thomas Carmichael, Benjamin Lillard, J. Hedges Crowell, Donald McLean, Charles E. Sprague, James Henry Parker, Clarence Burns, Lauron Ingels, Richard Hutchinson Stearns, Bartow S. Weeks, Hugo F. Hoeffler, Theodore Connelly, Albert Loening, Esther Hermann, Charles Austin Bates, Leigh Harrison, Frank M. Case, Morgan J. Goldsmith, Miss Florence Guernsey, and Miss Mary Garrett Hay.

Mrs. Henry Winter Davis, 108 West 131st Street, and Mrs. William Day returned a short time ago from a visit of several weeks in Palm Beach.

One of the June weddings will be that of Miss Elsie Godwin of Plainfield, N. J., formerly of Brooklyn, to Frederick P. Radcliffe, Jr., of this city. Miss Godwin is well known in Brooklyn society and has hosts of friends in Plainfield. Mr. Radcliffe was for several seasons a member of the Friday Evening Assemblies and the Holland Dances.

Bedell Parker, President of the Georgia Society, sailed last week for Europe. He will return to his apartments in Bretton Hall about the middle of May.

On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Eben G. Marsh gave a bridge party in her home, 340 West Eighty-fifth Street. There were thirty present.

An event of the week was the luncheon and linen shower given by Miss Florence Nugent, Eighty-eighth Street and Riverside Drive, for Miss Olga Townsend, who will be one of the early June brides. Some of those invited were Miss Marie Simms, Miss Alice Cramer, Miss Leah Martini, Miss Sarah Elder, Miss Ruby Ross, Miss Lily Ross, Miss Anne Silvery, Miss Louise Nugent, Miss Viola Martin, and Miss Dorothy Wheeler.

The members of the Rainy Day Club will celebrate the tenth birthday of that club on Wednesday, May 2. The event will take the form of a reception and breakfast, with the annual installation of the officers, who will be elected in about two weeks. Mrs. A. M. Palmer, the President, will be assisted at the reception by Mesdames Katherine E. Von Klenner, Esther Herrman, Brice Collard, M. H. Kinsley, Samuel Schiff, George Studwell, and C. Irwin.

Mrs. Mary Hill Brown gave a reception-musicale yesterday afternoon and evening in her studio, in the Atelier Building, 33 West Sixty-seventh Street. Mrs. Brown was assisted in receiving by Mrs. C. D. T. Gibson, Mrs. Stephen Maley, Miss Louise Kellers, and Miss Sanford. Miss Florida Pier and Miss Edith Hill of Providence poured tea. Some of those invited were Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Buell, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Arons, Mr. and Mrs. John Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Arnold, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Doubleday, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. McClure, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Markham, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sewell, Mr. and Mrs. William Robert Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Will Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Gaines, Miss Jean Clerihew, Miss Sally Akers, Miss Fielding Roselle, and Mrs. Carrol Livingston. There were baritone solos by William Harper, violin selections by Nicola Thomas, and Mrs. Brown played some snatches of Wagner for the entertainment of her guests. There were about 200 invitations sent out.

On Saturday, the sixth musicale for the season of the Rubinstein Club will be given in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf. Thursday, the 19th, is the date set for the third concert of the club. This will be held in the grand ballroom.

On Tuesday afternoon the second of the series of three bridge and hearts parties that the Riverside Day Nursery is giving was held in the Hotel Regent, Broadway and Seventy-first Street. Mrs. Ernest Pfarrius, 57 West Seventieth Street, will be the hostess at the third. The committee in charge includes Mesdames Percy K. Klock, Chairman; Morrison Gilmore, Charles Gregory, Ernest Pfarrius, David Oliphant Haynes, Annie Battin, John M. Mossman, John C. Noble, Eugene Hoffman Porter, Charles F. Terhune, and Miss Grace Thompson.

Mrs. E. Benjamin Ramsdell, 76 Convent Avenue, gave the third of her informal at homes on Wednesday. The fourth and last will take place the coming Wednesday afternoon.

There will be a reception on Monday, April 16, at Happy Day House, 236 Second Avenue. It will be given by the Little Mothers' Aid Association in honor of the founder and Honorary President, Mrs. J. B. Johnson. The hours are from 3 until 6. There will also be an Easter festival on Saturday, the 21st, but this will be for the little mothers themselves, and 700 of them will be entertained. Each will receive a potted geranium to take home. One of the most active of the auxiliaries, No. 3, of which Mrs. Malcolm MacLean is Chairman, is planning for a bridge and euchre to be held on Tuesday, the 17th, in the Hotel St. Andrew. Altogether the Little Mothers' Aid Association is one of the busiest charities in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Davis have recently returned from a three months' tour of England and the Continent to their apartments in the Hotel Belleclaire.

The benefit performance at the Hudson on Monday was most successful. It was given for the Vassar Students' Aid Society. The committee in charge were Mesdames Louis H. Allen, Louis Guttman, Charles E. Potter, O. D. M. Baker, Frederic Swift, Herman Meyer, K. Imanishi, Stanley, Emma White, Jessie Emerson Moffat, Charlton Wallace, Woolsey Shepard, Irving Twombly, and the Misses Caroline M. Gerrish, Stella Miles, Della Fay Norris, Elsie Borg, Edith Borg, Jennie Poerene, Adelaide Wallach, Estelle Smith, Catherine Aiken, Marie Hofer, Honora Gibson, Lois May, Rita Wallach, Florine Herts, and Ruby Speyer. Mark Twain, David Warfield, Miss Grace Elliston, and a number of other leading lights of the social and dramatic world were present.

On Tuesday, April 24, there will be a luncheon of the Woman's Republican Association, State of New York, in Delmonico's. Mrs. James Griswold Wentz, the President, has secured several good speakers for the occasion. Among them Robert Watchorn, Commissioner of Immigration, and Lieut. Gov. Lynn Bruce. There will be reports of the various counties read in the morning. The luncheon, served at 1:30, will be preceded by a reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Stone left their apartments in the Hotel Belleclaire on Tuesday for a trip to Seattle, Washington. They will be gone about a month.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mildeberger of the San Remo, Central Park West and Seventy-fifth Street, are spending a month in Atlantic City.

The California Club, Mrs. Thomas Vivian, President, gave a social tea on Tuesday afternoon in the Waldorf.

Col. and Mrs. John Henry Martin of the Ansonia gave a small dinner last week, prior to leaving town. They will spend the Eastern season in Atlantic City with their daughter, Miss Madge. Mrs. Martin, who is an enthusiastic horsewoman, has recently acquired a span of high-steppers and drives daily in the Park.

Mrs. H. N. Whitney, 258 West Seventy-second Street, is giving a series of four at homes on the Tuesdays of April, to introduce her son's wife, Mrs. Arthur Whitney. The latter, who was a Colorado girl, was a February bride, and has just returned from the South, where the honeymoon was spent. Several hundred cards have been sent out for these receptions, which are quite informal.

One of the week's largest bridge and euchre parties was that given by Mrs. J. H. Duncan, 329 West Eighty-second Street, for the benefit of the New York Home for Destitute Crippled Children. It took place at Peverty's, Seventy-fifth Street and Broadway, on Friday. On the committee with Mrs. Duncan were Mesdames G. W. Wallace, A. L. Erlanger, L. L. Hill, J. A. Stevenson, H. C. Stratton, Charles W. Dabb, George V. Blackburn, S. B. Frost, T. Edwin Ward, H. W. Totten, L. Burns, L. F. Werba, L. W. Boynton, M. Sichel, C. M. Sellers, and the Misses Livingston, Hill, Nellis, Aylesworth, McElroy, Dunlop, and Holwith.

Thursday evening, the 19th of this month, will be busy socially. Besides the large flower card party of the Little Mothers and the Rubinstein concert, there will be a large dance in Bretton Hall, Broadway and Eighty-sixth Street.

Among the first of the Eastern sales was that held on Tuesday in the Waldorf by the Free Industrial School for Crippled Children, Mrs. Arthur Elliot Fish, President. Some of the ladies associated with Mrs. Fish in the work were Mesdames Samuel Shipley Blood, Charles Henry Hilliard, F. A. Baggs, Augustus Burr Carrington, F. Keith Taylor, W. S. Young, Hugh Reid Lawford, C. A. Bates, Clarence Dickenson, Julius Hart, Alfred Watkins, Frank N. Lewis, and the Misses Coates, Guernsey, Scheu, Greenfield, Fife, and Smith.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, President of the Woman's International Suffrage Association, will leave her apartments in the Marie Antoinette early in May for a trip abroad. New Working Girls' Hotel Encourages Matrimony Trowmart Inn, Which Opens Next Week, Will Put a Premium on Engagements--- Offers Moderate Rates for Board and Has No Arbitrary Rules and Regulations.

TROWMART INN, the new hotel for working girls, serves a triple purpose. William R. H. Martin, who has erected it, believes that all true happiness comes through marriage. So a premium is to be placed on all matrimonial engagements which take place within the handsome new hostelry that is to be opened on April 15.

Girls who work long hours in factory, shop, and store, and whose leisure is spent within the dull confines of a cheap lodging or boarding house, have few opportunities for making and pursuing the acquaintance of desirable young men. The dingy parlor of the third-rate boarding house is not conducive to matrimony. Girls of gentleness and refinement do not care to be courted upon the open highway, nor in public parks, and thus the world is filling with spinsters, who, according to Mr. Martin, had they a proper place in which to entertain their admirers, would develop into happy, excellent wives and still happier mothers.

Trowmart Inn is to contribute to this laudable purpose. That is one reason for its erection. The primary cause for the construction of the handsome new hotel in Abingdon Square is that a useful memorial may stand to a small son of Mr. Martin. It is also built in honor of his wife. The name of the new inn is a combination of that of the little boy who died, who was called Trowbridge, and the surname of the family.

While the requirements to become a guest of the Trowmart Inn are few, even less are the rules and regulations.

The girl or woman who desires a room and board at this new hotel has simply to be of the class which labors for a small wage, and whose parents have no home within the city. In building the home Mr. Martin had chiefly in view the girls and young women who come to New York from small towns, villages, or the country and of necessity live in small, cheerless rooms in crowded, cheap houses. For their comfort nothing seems to have escaped his keen observation, for there are six cozy parlors on the first floor and an ironing room on each bedroom floor, where the small laundry work of every boarder may be easily done.

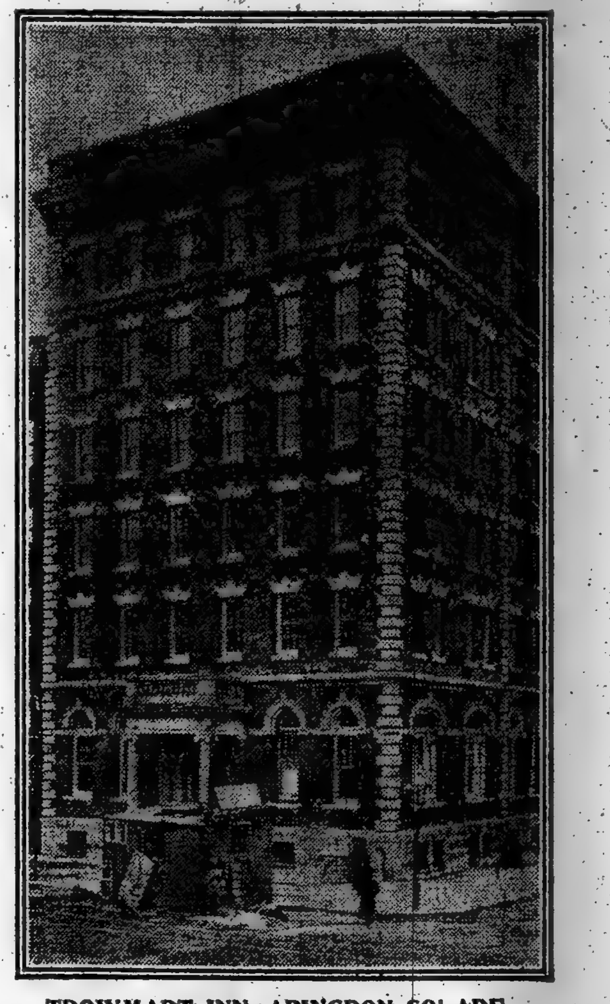
The house is splendidly situated when it is remembered that most of its occupants remain in the city during the sultry, oppressive months of the long Summer. It is on the southwest corner of Hudson and West Twelfth Streets. The small triangle plot which forms Abingdon Square makes a broad sweep in front of the house, which permits a welcome breeze on the hot nights of July and August. The hotel is also within walking distance of the shopping district. It is from this, as well as from the near-by huge factories, that it is expected most of the hotel guests will come.

This hotel is six stories high, and will accommodate in the neighborhood of 400 girls. It has a handsome façade of Harvard brick, touched in the copings with a dull red stone. The entrance door is approached by three or four broad steps, and has a dignified portico over it.

The interior of the structure has the air of a commodious club. The wide corridor will be a resting place for those who do not care for the big general living room on the left. Between this long parlor and the dining room, which opens on Greenwich Street, is a series of small reception rooms. Here the guests may receive their visitors, who, Mr. Martin hopes, may be matrimonially inclined.

On the opposite side from the general living room is the library. The walls of this are lined with book shelves, and here the girls may read and write. Back of this are the offices of the hotel, and a small comfortable suite has been arranged which will be rented to a medical woman.

The dining room is a mammoth room with sixteen windows. These open to the north on West Twelfth Street, as well as on Greenwich Street on the rear. Aside from the bright air that comes naturally from these the room has an added cheeriness from the ecru coloring. The furnishings of the room are to be of dull antique oak, and the tables will seat two, four, six or eight girls.



TROWMART INN, ABINGDON SQUARE.

White muslin curtains are to be at the windows. The linen, china, and silverware are to be dainty, though inexpensive, and the whole effect will be attractive.

The five floors of sleeping rooms are similar one to another. Most of the accommodations are for single rooms. These are 10 by 12 feet in size, and each has an outside window. The double rooms are considerably larger, the only difference in the furnishings being, however, that these will have two beds and two dressing tables. A washstand, a table, and a couple of chairs complete the furniture. Every bedroom in the house has a medium-sized closet, and in the basement is a large locker where the trunks are to be kept. This is fitted with iron shelves, so that each trunk may be easily reached.

There are five baths on each bedroom floor, and not only is the plumbing modern and scientific, but the walls of the bathrooms are marble.

The kitchens, bakery, and refrigerators are in the basement. Ralph Townsend, the architect of the Trowmart Inn, points to these with pride, and insists that neither the St. Regis nor the Waldorf-Astoria is superior in its culinary appointments to the hotel which is to house working girls after the middle of April.

Here, too, is a good-sized laundry, with porcelain tubs, to which free access is to be had day and night by the occupants of the inn. The wages of clerks in stores, stenographers, bookkeepers, and girls in manufactories are not so great but that they have to economize closely in the matter of laundry. The girl who may wash and iron her shirtwaists, her little turnovers, her handkerchiefs, and her stockings at her boarding house considers herself a particularly privileged person. At Mr. Martin's hotel she is to be encouraged to do her "small wash," and without extra charge she may use gas with which to iron it. Each floor is equipped with a small ironing room which has tables, boards, irons, and holders all ready for the smoothing out of the dainty small accessories so dear to the feminine heart.

In no way is the hotel to be looked upon as a charitable institution. Upon this point Mr. Martin is most emphatic. The guests will pay for what they get. A single room with breakfast and dinner will cost $4 a week. Where there are two girls in a room the price is to be $3 each, and at these prices Mr. Martin is positive that the house will be self-sustaining. This far, however, he is willing to be a philanthropist. He does not care for any return upon the capital that he has invested. He will be satisfied if the girls have a happy home—and if a number of marriages accrue each year from the Trowmart Inn.

The house is absolutely without rule or regulation. The guests will come and go as freely as though living at the Gotham, the Manhattan, or the Holland House.

If a guest goes to the theatre every night in the week Mr. Martin insists that it is a matter of indifference to the management of his house. The hour at which she comes in will not interest the hotel clerk, nor will what she does in her leisure concern the proprietor. If she proves herself an objectionable guest her room will be asked for the same as in any other first-class hotel where a guest is considered undesirable.

"But there won't be any of this kind," asserts the owner of the Trowmart Inn. "The girls who will want to live at this hotel will be all right. Girls whose conduct is not correct won't care to be among those who are. They never do, and if one or two should happen to get into the house I feel sure that they will leave it of their own volition, feeling that they are entirely out of their element."

Judge Olmsted of Children's Court Criticises the Board of Education

IGNORANCE, depravity, indifference, and supineness of parents and deplorable home conditions are cited as the chief causes of the incorrigible child problem as it exists in New York. There are among those who have the welfare of our juvenile population at heart wide differences of opinion as to the gravity of the situation and as to the measures that should be adopted to solve it.

In a previous article in THE SUNDAY NEW YORK TIMES it was set forth that careful inquiry had disclosed the fact that the bad girl question did not exist to anything like the extent that some well-meaning alarmists had furnished reason to believe it did, and that it did not tend very far in the direction of immorality. A year's statistics of the Children's Court in Manhattan went far to confirm this—the fact being duly borne in mind that the vast majority of such cases are never brought to the cognizance of the courts. The problem of incorrigibility, then, it would appear, resolves itself chiefly into the handling of boys, and the bad boy, all authorities consulted agree, is, as a rule, much more responsive to kindly efforts to reform than the bad girl is.

Judge W. H. Olmsted, who has had considerable experience with juvenile culprits and never forgets what the purpose and functions of the Children's Court are, said:

"Some people think, or affect to believe, that all parental authority and disciplinary power is vested in us. It is doubtless a most comfortable assumption, opening up an avenue of escape from a whole lot of trouble and responsibility. The Board of Education, above all institutions, manifests an undue eagerness to act upon it.

"This court—and I cannot emphasize the fact too strongly—is not a penal power. It is not a cure-all. It must be considered only as exercising the chancellory power of the State. It is merely an agent, merely reformatory and disciplinary, designed to strengthen the efforts of those whose duty it is to reform and discipline and in no way intended to relieve them of this duty.

"A very large proportion of the youngsters arraigned ought not to be brought here at all. The liberty of the person as guaranteed to the individual by the Constitution does not apply to the child. Under the compulsory education law the Board of Education has the power to suspend a child and put it in a truant school. It can bring severe and most wholesome pressure to bear upon the parents, who too often are the real offenders. Why does it not wield its power to the fullest extent instead of looking to us to do its work? Is it because when it does put its disciplinary machinery in motion it does it in such a slow, red-tape way that it is not effective? That is what happens.

"I repeat that this is not a penal court, and we are not going to send children away for an indefinite period. That is what parents and guardians, who are altogether too prone—like the Board of Education—to shirk their duty in the matter, would like us to do with their troublesome charges. We cannot punish the Board of Education for not exercising its disciplinary power, but we can and do punish the parents indirectly, when they deserve it, by inflicting a fine. When it costs a remiss parent anything to have his child disciplined he generally squirms. He did not expect to pay for it. What is a State institution for if not to do his work for nothing? Under Section 921 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a father can be charged for the support of his child in an institution, and through the application of this law parents are paying between $40,000 and $50,000 a year. There is some satisfaction in that.

"If crime and unruliness are increasing among the city's juvenile population it is due to the fact that in the vast majority of cases the parents do not bring their children up properly, and rely on the schools to do the indispensable training and disciplining for them. In fact, some parents do not seem to care what agency assumes their authority so long as they are spared the trouble of exercising it."

An opportunity to reply to Judge Olmsted's criticism of the Board of Education was afforded to Clarence E. Meleney, Associate City Superintendent in charge of the Compulsory Education Department. Mr. Meleney expressed pained astonishment that Judge Olmsted should make such statements, and was loath to comment upon them.

"All I will say," he said, "is that it is a very wrong position for the Judge to take. There is no disposition here to shirk responsibility, but there is every disposition and effort to co-operate with the Children's Court. The plain facts in the case are these: The law says that if we suspend a boy for more than a week he must be put in a truant school. We cannot send him to such a school unless the parents sign a consent to this proceeding. Judge Olmsted says we have the authority to do so, but other Judges and the Corporation Counsel say that we have not. If a parent refuses to sign a consent we have to take the case to the Children's Court to have the boy committed. These are the only cases we do take there.

"As to exercising salutary pressure, we have been doing that right along. We do it every day. We have no power to impose fines upon parents, nor can we take them to the Children's Court to have them punished; but the law does empower us to arraign them in the City Magistrates' Courts, and we miss no opportunity of haling recalcitrant, delinquent parents there in order that fines may be imposed upon them or that they may be made to contribute toward the maintenance of their children in an institution. These, which we perforce must, are the only kind of cases we seek to unload on the courts. Wherefore I take it that Judge Olmsted's strictures were entirely unwarranted."

However this may be, and however divergent the opinions of educators and others upon the question of remedial methods, the views of all point back to the home and the parents as the chief source of the bad child question—this and the congested district which renders proper living an impossibility. There is an irresponsibility in parents that has to be combated, an unwillingness to recognize their own obligations and an unnatural willingness to turn their children over to others for any purpose except that of taking their wages.

Mothers' meetings and similar collective efforts to instruct parents in their duties to their children are considered by some reformers as little less than futile. They object that the grossly ignorant mothers, those who above all stand in need of enlightenment, do not and will not attend these meetings. Individual effort by workers of tact and discretion in the habitations of these women is the only effective way of reaching them and doing good, they say.

To the suggestion that these personal visits probably would meet with anything but appreciation from those whom it is intended to benefit, they reply by pointing out that the efforts being made by the nurses' settlements to carry to people in their own homes instruction in handling their sick or delicate offspring are gratefully received, while school teachers, real sisters of charity, who do not consider that their moral duty to their charges is confined to classroom instruction, have told the writer that by getting discreetly into touch with parents in cases where the imperative interests of a child demanded the exercise of some influence for good they have been able gradually to effect complete transformation in home conditions and to induce some families to move out of a congested district into quarters where living conditions were more decent.

An endeavor also is made by some teachers to reach the homes indirectly by persuading children to practice at home the instruction in good manners and elevating principles they receive at school; for, as one experienced Principal put it, talking of conditions as she has found them in her particular sphere of operation, "the east side mother is garrulous in the extreme, but is neither a thinker nor a doer."

An institution which has been lauded as a most intelligent and important step in the direction of bettering the moral condition of children by keeping them off the streets is, in the opinion of some observers, having a deplorable effect, as far as girls are concerned, by undermining the taste for home life inherent in the average normal girl. This is the night play centre. The critics say that the play centre attracts girls from home and also furnishes an excuse for being out in the streets at night which is accepted without suspicion by parents who otherwise would keep watch and ward over their girls.

Another peculiar influence operating against the sanctity of home life in New York and having a direct bearing upon the moral problem has been noted. This is that children born here of foreign parents and enjoying the benefits of American schools and opportunities perceive as they grow up that their fathers and mothers are not "up to date," and this knowledge gradually engenders a disregard if not absolute contempt for parental authority.

Of course, after all, individual effort and influence, whether at home or in school, ever must be the chief factor in bringing up a child in the way it should go, therefore much depends on the qualifications and personality of the teacher. Said one instructor—a woman—who possesses a pleasant face and eyes, in which a twinkle of merriment appears rarely to be absent:

"Bad boys? Why, in all my experience I never met a boy I could not jolly into good behavior. Chuck a boy under the chin and tell him laughingly that he is a ninny to act the way he does and a woman can do anything with him, where a lecture or serious talking to might be worse than useless."

Too large classes in schools are woefully destructive of the personal influence factor. Small classes, regular and special, are recognized as one of the best means of dealing with the child, but this is a means that is out of the question at present, when the greatest problem is to provide accommodation of any kind for all the little ones entitled to attend school.

An important advance in the right direction has been made with the special classes for children who enter school without preparation when above the normal school age. These children, say of 11 or 12 years of age, formerly were humiliated by being put in classes with little ones just out of the kindergarten, with results that naturally were more or less demoralizing to all. Classes for mental defectives, limited in size to fifteen pupils, are another strong agency for good. In the case of girls it is a powerful corrective of the moral danger, for a mental defective is found not infrequently to be a moral defective, and the training in manual work which is a large part of their occupation in school hours prepares a girl for a useful occupation in her subsequent life.

Along similar lines it is contended that instead of sending deaf, dumb, or crippled children to special institutions more or less under private control, and in which the unfortunate little ones are compelled to associate only with others similarly afflicted, it is the duty of the city to provide special classes in the public schools for these physical defectives, where under congenial conditions they could be made self-supporting and self-respecting citizens.

Globe-Trotting Woman's Impressions of India and Its People

BOMBAY, March 20.—Impressions of India are as varied as studies in botany. All students do not see alike, and it was not intended that they should do so; yet, should one aspire to write of India as one finds it, the first impression would probably be that the country contains three classes—the dressed, the half-dressed, and the naked.

In the latter classes you may find the innumerable, immutable members of caste, who, following traditions, are not ashamed of their partial or complete nakedness. What their forefathers did is good enough for them. Evolution has touched them with so light a finger that it is hardly perceptible to the European, to whom it signifies much, or to the native, to whom it signifies more. But although the natives shrink from the touch of the Occident, Fate, in the shape of the English Government, English railroads, and English custom, is slowly overtaking the Oriental prejudice, idea, and habit. There is, too, an educational India on foot for the women as well as the men, and this bids fair to alter conditions more effectually and more rapidly than hundreds of years of government.

After receiving the first impressions of India one might venture to say that the India of to-day is not the India we have read about. The interpretations of India by Kipling and others were true—in the past. Even if these were highly colored does not matter much, for the main features no longer even exist, save in the remote byways of India, where few go save those who must. Kipling's stories of cantonment life, however, are absolutely correct, if one may be allowed to judge a man's point of view from that of a woman's. But, considering the inexhaustible history of India, and the indescribably varying conditions, it would be impossible for Kipling or anybody else to give a true picture of India outside the cantonments.

In the class called the dressed it may also be said that India has changed remarkably. Maharajahs now go to England for education, and the result is that when they return they manage their estates differently, and this naturally affects the lower classes dependent upon them for a living. On all sides, too, free schools are springing up which bid fair to revolutionize conditions among the half-dressed and the naked. The mystic India of twenty years ago has dropped its veil, and to-day those who knew it in other days confess that they "don't know India yet," for the simple reason that they have lived with the child too long and too closely to notice its change and growth.

The Maharajahs have gone a step further, too, than self-education. They have educated their wives. To-day the harem is practically abolished, and each man has but one better half. The old-fashioned still adhere to purdah conditions—that is, the curtain rule whereby the women are separated from the world's eyes, but the coming generation will surely do away with that too.

The Government gives frequent purdah parties, and these, coupled with education, are having a telling effect upon the women. The Maharajah who comes home unexpectedly will in the future find his wife occupied with books, sewing, and mental work that in other days would have horrified him. The purdah is an unnatural condition, and was adopted by the Hindus because of an invasion by the Mohammedans.

The native of India is suspicious by nature, but very patient. A very bad trait is greed, but when one sees the poverty of the land one ceases to wonder at this. A roadmaker gets 2 annas a day (5 cents,) out of which he has to buy his own food. The women receive 1½ annas for the same work. They exist on rabbits' food, drink vile water, and live the "simple" life to perfection. Doctors at home should send their patients to India if they want to get them back to nature. In Delhi, the Purdah Hospital has been established for twenty-two years, and is only now gaining success. The Lady Atchinson Hospital in Lahore, capital of the Punjab, has been making strenuous efforts to be self-supporting. Dr. Mildred Staley, its head, could not dare at first to use the knife. To-day the purdah ladies say: "If she cut off my head she will put it on again," and submit without a whimper.

Child marriage is the retarding element in women's progression in India. There are in the Punjab alone 360 schools, the Victoria Purdah School being the most successful. A charming old palace in one of the narrow native town streets is the scene of learning, but long before the scholars are advanced to even high school admission they no longer attend, because of child marriage. To see a little one, carried in her doolie, carefully guarded that no man save her husband shall see her, go back and forth to and from school, and then be suddenly whisked off to disappear in the Tenana is a piteous thing to Western women.

The Parsee school in Bombay is the most advanced native seat of learning, but that is not a purdah school. The Christian schools are better. Converted natives do not have to consider old customs. Dr. Ewing's American Mission School can boast of 400 young men preparing for M. A., B. A., and B. Sc. They are mostly sons of gentlemen who can afford to pay liberally for education.

Greater strides in the education of both men and women will be made in the next few years. Habit is a strong thing; old customs, older than we are, cannot be overcome in a day; but India is progressing so rapidly that the Anglo-Indian is stupefied with surprise.

The innumerable barriers between the races will soon disappear. Maharajahs will have as guests in their autos proud white women who now disdain them. That is the trend of things. Purdah conditions retard it, but that system is on the wane. Give India ten more years and she will shake off the last of her customs. The Maharani Chuikoo Scindia of Gwalior now plays the piano and sings Scotch songs. Her drawing room after dinner is very similar to a London drawing room, except that there are no men present. This a few years ago would have been unheard of. Education and a Maharajah of Scindia who believed in advancement made it possible. Unfortunately the old Maharani, Scindia's mother, is old-fashioned, and is the only retarding spoke in the wheel of Gwalior.

The animals, too, will they change? At present the sheep look like goats, the cows like bullocks, the pigs—well, the pigs look like bad drawings in a child's picture book. Here they are called wild hog. The asses are quite natural, as they are, in a sense, the world over. The cow, unless her calf or a substitute is beside her, will not give a drop of milk. Her wishes are respected, but she is often beaten by small boys, in spite of the fact that she is sacred. Small boys, observe, are the same the world over.

CLARA B. HUNTER.

Jonas is Forced to Submit to an Investigation

JONAS awoke at bay.

Being a small man, with all the curiosity that clings to a diminutive specimen of his kind, he had fallen asleep in a chair dragged to the very centre of the kitchen floor that he might miss seeing and hearing nothing that happened in his family.

Now he sat up and rubbed his eyes, confronted by a pair that belonged to his spouse.

"Jes es well scrub dat sleep outuh dem eyes," remarked Jemimy, his wife, with a contemptuous sniff. "You's gwinetuh be 'vestigated."

"Name o' Gawd! what's dat?" asked Jonas, turning half a shade less black.

"You'll fin' out soon nuff," sniffed Jemimy. "What I wants tuh know is, who's been projecrin' wid muh money stockin'?"

Jonas sat upright and gulped.

"Name o'—" he began, but Jemimy cut him off short.

"'Tain't no use a-blasphemin' fo' dese chillun whar I bin tryin' to chain up in de way dey should go," she said severely. "I axes you a plain queshton, en I wants a plain answuh, I does."

"Den you done come tuh de wronges' pusson you coulda picked out, 'oman," said Jonas, venturing on a new tactic. "When did de law en de Gorspil en even de debble hisself give you de license tuh 'vestigate yo' own husban', I'd laik tuh know? You takes too much on yo'self. G'long, 'ten' tuh dat washin' en take dem chillun 'long outchuh wid you, 'fo' I lam eve'y one uv 'em, en you intuh de bargin."

"You lam who?" snorted Jemimy, rising from her seat and towering over him like a colossus in ebony. "You lam who? You ornary little bowlaigged runt uv a niggah, you. I got a gret min' tuh scour you off'n de face uv de uth, dat I is. Git up f'om dyah."

Jonas rose hastily.

"Tuhn out dem pockets."

He rolled his bead eyes upon her sullenly. "Sen' dem chillun out," he muttered.

"Dat I ain't gwine do no sich a thing," answered his stronger half. "Dey gwine stay right whar dey air tuh larn de lesson uv onrighteousness f'om dey own daddy. Tuhn out dem pockets, I say."

Jonas poured a miser's wealth in coppers and nickels upon the kitchen table. He looked shrunken, yet defiant.

Jemimy eyed him scornfully. "Wall, dis is a sight in de eyes uv Gawd en men," she said. "De fathuh uv a fambly—fo' daid en seb'n livin—stealin'—yes, Suh, stealin', jes laik a common, low-down chicken thief, f'om his own wife, robbin' huh uv eve'y cent she done wuk huh finguhs tuh de bone tuh save. Tuh think dat Ise bin spyahed tuh see dis day!" and Jemimy threw her apron over her head and rocked her grief.

Wails sprung from the three youngest throats of the "seb'n livin'," and presently the thief himself began to show unmistakable signs of emotion.

"Jemimy," he sniffled, "what was you savin' dat money fuh?"

"None uv yo' bizness," came from under the apron.

"Yas, 'tis muh bizness, too," sobbed Jonas. "Yas 'tis muh bizness, 'oman. You was savin' hit tuh buy a tombstone en a wreath uv immorals fuh yo' ole man. Nemmin' how I knowed hit. I knowed hit, en dat's nuff, en I kin tell you, 'oman, [boo-hoo,] I ain't ready tuh die yet, dat I ain't, en I don' wantchuh tuh be puttin' none uv yo' conjuh spells on me, nuthuh, savin' money tuh buy me no tombstone whatsomedevur. I wan't gwine spen' dat money. Watchuh reckon I want wid yo' money? Ain't I got fif- cents in muh pocket? I jes borruh hit tuh brek de spell, dat's all. I—I was gwine buy you a Eastuh bonnet wid dat money, clar fo' gracious, honey."

Jemimy's apron came down in a hurry.

"Den hit's de fus thing you was evuh gwine buy me sence we-all stood up befo' de preachuh," she said wrathfully, "en you was gwine tuh take muh money tuh buy hit wid! Watchuh think I want wid de kin' uv bonnet a little two-prong fork laik you'd buy? Humph! Jonas, you needs 'vestigatin' wuss'n ennybody I evuh heah tell uv. I ain't th'ough wid you yet, nigguh! You heah me? Dyah's trubble comin' tuh you fo' I gits th'ough wid you. Ise gotten mighty tiahed seein' you settin' roun' waitin' fuh me tuh put vittles in you' mouf th'ee times a day, en I gwine tell you right now ef you don git a move on you en fotch yo' dolluh's wuth uv wages in heah eve'y Sadday night Ise gwinetuh put sich a conjuh on you dat fus' thing you know you'll be Up Yonduh pickin' chickens fuh Marse Peter's dinnuh, en dat's Gawd's own trufe. Now I done tole you."

And Jonas slunk through a crack in the door that the hound dog had just left open.

MINERS MAY ARBITRATE ON NEED OF ARBITRATION

Their Committee Will Meet Anthracite Operators To-day.

SAY NEW CONDITIONS EXIST

A Speaker Suggests to Central Federated Union That the Coal Dealers Be Investigated.

The question of what arguments the miners will advance at the meeting with the anthracite operators in the Jersey Central Building to-day was discussed yesterday by President Mitchell's subcommittee of seven anthracite mine workers at the Ashland House. Mr. Mitchell would not talk on the subject, but it was learned that his committee holds that since the award of the Anthracite Strike Commission was made new conditions have been created which require arbitration.

It was thought that the miners' committee of seven will try to show that the arbitration proposal is justified, but will be willing to agree to a counter-proposal to arbitrate the question whether new conditions which are arbitrable, and which are not covered by the award of the Anthracite Strike Commission, have arisen.

"Such conditions have arisen," said William H. Dettrey, who is a member of the Committee of Seven and of the Conciliation Board of the Anthracite Strike Commission, "and they ought to be arbitrated. There are many inequalities as to wages and conditions which I could cite."

He gave the case of one outside man who, he said, was working for $1.17 a day, while another man was getting $1.80 a day working half a mile away under the same conditions.

The Operators' Committee of Seven authorized a statement last evening to prove that arbitration such as that brought about by the Board of Conciliation was good for both employers and employes.

At yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union Delegate Fitzgerald of the Letter Carriers' Union introduced the subject of the coal strike. He declared that the coal operators were a trust, and were indifferent to the interests of the people of the country. He suggested that the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to propose an investigation by a House committee of the conditions of coal mining in the interests of the public.

"I will propose," he said, "that this investigation be conducted with a view to the Government taking over the mines of such operators as were manifestly indifferent to public interest. The miners are entitled to all they ask."

Several proposals were made, and one delegate suggested that the matter be brought to the attention of John Mitchell first.

"I think we are going too fast," said Charles Delaney of the Granite Cutters' Union. "While I am in favor of all that Delegate Fitzgerald says, yet I do not think that it will be for the interest of the miners if they took the action suggested, as negotiations to avert a strike are now going on between the miners and the operators."

Fitzgerald withdrew his motion, but said he could not understand why 10 per cent. increase in wages would increase the price of coal $1.20 per ton.

"I think the dealers are the people we have to go after," said Delegate Rooney of the Bluestone Cutters. "I understand that they have an organization, and I believe it is for the purpose of raising the price of coal. I move that a committee be appointed to investigate the Coal Merchants' Association."

Delegate Hatch of the Upholsterers' Union said that he thought the resolution a foolish one. After some discussion it was referred to the Executive Committee.

PHILADELPHIA, April 8.—Information from several sources in the Scranton region is that the operators will to-morrow reject the miners' arbitration proposal and offer nothing in its place, simply reaffirming their former declaration that all the matters at issue have been arbitrated by the strike commission, and that there is no good reason advanced why the award should be disturbed.

It is also said that they will declare that under no consideration would they consent to the recognition and check-off questions, because they are unalterably opposed to the closed shop.

The operators, it is expected, will stand pat on their first offer—a continuation of the commission's award for three years—and take the consequences. The independent operators have notified the big companies that they are ready to follow their lead.

ROBBINS DEFENDS HIMSELF.

He Suffers from Strain, but Denies Charges of Ohio Operators.

PITTSBURG, April 8.—Francis L. Robbins, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Pittsburg Coal Company, is confined to his home in this city as a result of the mental and physical strain he has undergone in the labor controversy with the miners during the last three weeks.

He issued a statement to-night in which he says the resolutions adopted by the Ohio Coal Operators' Association yesterday are not in accordance with the facts. The statement says:

"The inter-State movement was not disrupted by me, but terminated Thursday, March 30, when a motion was made by Mr. Winder, Chairman of the Ohio operators, and seconded by Cal. Smith, President of the Illinois Operators' Association, that the joint convention adjourn sine die. At no time did I make any effort to place any burden upon any State. I simply asked that in the event of no general settlement being reached the miners would permit any operators in any or all States to operat their mines if they wished to do so on the scale of 1903, and thus prevent a general suspension of the mines of the country, which would have been a National calamity.

"The action of the majority of the Ohio operators in endeavoring to prevent those operators in the State who are ready and willing to sign the scale from operating their mines is a high-handed proceeding, a bad example to their employes and to labor organizations, and is illegal and against public policy."

ABRAHAM BARKER KILLED.

Abraham Barker, 85 years old, of 204 South Forty-second Street, West Philadelphia, Penn., father of Wharton Barker, fell from a Madison Avenue car, southbound, at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Ninth Street, shortly before midnight last night and was instantly killed.

With him at the time was his wife, Anna, who was almost prostrated. She was taken uptown by some friends in an automobile. The aged couple had been staying at the St. Denis Hotel since they came here Saturday. It was said that Mr. Barker came to New York to attend an annual banquet.

Details of the accident could not be obtained. It is said that Mr. Barker slipped and fell from the car as he was about to alight. His skull was fractured.

Mr. and Mrs. Barker had been calling on some friends up town and were returning to the hotel. The body was taken to the Mercer Street Station.

PHILADELPHIA, April 8.—Abraham Barker was the oldest banker in Philadelphia. He retired in May, 1899, after a membership of fifty years in the Stock Exchange. Mr. Barker prepared the first printed stock lists ever used by brokers to faciliate the conduct of their business with their customers. A still more notable and far-reaching innovation due to him was the establishment of the Stock Exchange clearing house.

He was born in New York on June 3, 1821. His connection with the Stock Exchange of this city began in 1845, four years after his removal t[illegible] where, in 1842, he established the banking house of Barker Brothers & Co. Mr. Barker was no novice in the business, as even before his majority, on Dec. 10, 1837, he had opened a banking business in New Orleans, and he was only following out family traditions in this line, as his father, Jacob Barker, of New York, was one of the most eminent financiers of his day, his most notable achievement being the taking of the entire Government loan of $10,000,000 in the war of 1812.

Mr. Barker continued at the head of the banking house of Barker Brothers & Co. for half a century, during which time the firm was identified with the financing of many important matters. They acted as agents for the Cramps when Russian cruisers were fitted out here and new ones built.

In spite of his age he was remarkably active. Mr. Barker had eight children.

Abraham Barker's first wife was a daughter of William Wharton. His second wife, who survives, was Miss Crane, a daughter of James Crane of Elizabeth, N. J. Mr. Barker was one of the founders of the Union League.

HEAVY FINES FOR MOTORISTS.

New Rochelle Police Time Cars and Make Many Arrests.

Because of the killing on Sunday a week ago of Mrs. Betty Kuchler and her sister, Miss Alwina Stein, of New Rochelle, by a speeding automobile, the police there watched closely for all persons violating the speed ordinances yesterday. Chief Timmons set three traps, which resulted in thirteen persons being arrested and fined sums ranging from $100 to $35 each. Policemen with stop watches and red flags timed the cars. They made arrests whenever fifteen miles an hour was exceeded.

Judge Van Auken held court in the police station, about which a crowd lingered all day long.

A fine of $100 was imposed on Leland H. Dustin, an automobile agent of 106 West Sixty-first Street. The police said that Dustin went to Larchmont and changed the number of his machine and his clothing, thinking that they could not recognize him on the return trip.

One of the first cars brought in was that of Newburg Lawton, a lawyer of 40 Wall Street. Mr. Lawton protested a short time ago that the speed laws were not being enforced in New Rochelle. Notwithstanding this, he was indignant when his chauffeur, John Rutherford, was arrested. The case was adjourned. Alfred H. Bromell of No. 317 West Fifty-sixth Street was fined $50.

Avery Denison of 322 West Fifty-fifth Street, William Moister of 316 East Seventy-seventh Street, August Paul of 569 East 154th Street, William Holsmann, chauffeur, of 310 West Forty-eighth Street; Robert N. Bavier of New Rochelle, George S. Heft of 6 West 131st Street, Frank McHugh of Uniontown, N. J., and William L. Searles of New Rochelle.

Among those at the trial was Police Commissioner Kuchler, whose mother was one of the victims of the accident of Sunday a week ago. He is preparing a petition to the Legislature asking that over-speeding be made a felony punishable by imprisonment for first offense.

ARREST LODGE'S SECRETARY.

He Was Indicted on Charge of Keeping Campaign Contributions.

BOSTON, April 8.—Robert G. Proctor, Private Secretary of United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, for whose arrest on the charge of embezzlement a warrant was issued yesterday, surrendered himself at Police Headquarters today. Mr. Proctor was immediately released on $500 bail. He will be arraigned to-morrow.

The warrant was issued after the Grand Jury had made its report. The specific charge is that Proctor embezzled $225 belonging to John E. Bestgen of Quincy in October, 1904. Bestgen said he gave Proctor the money as a Republican campaign contribution, and that Proctor promised to aid him in obtaining a Consulship. No record of this sum appears upon the books of the Republican State Committee, and it has not been included in the returns of campaign contributions.

District Attorney Moran announced a few days ago that he had gone over the records of the State Committee, and in no place could he find any contributions credited to either Bestgen or Proctor. Major Thomas Talbot, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, declared, it is said, that he had no knowledge of the contribution. The District Attorney thereupon presented the case to the Grand Jury, and the officers of the Republican State Committee were summoned as witnesses.

Proctor is 40 years old, married, and has a voting residence at Quincy. For many years he has been associated with Senator Lodge. He was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1904.

CZAR'S ENTIRE EMPIRE DECLARES FOR REFORM

Not a Single Reactionary Is Elected to Parliament.

EVEN THE OCTOBERISTS FAIL

Peasants, Who Were Expected to Choose Conservatives, Vote for Well-Educated Progressives.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 8.—The Electoral Colleges in twenty-eight out of the fifty-one provinces of European Russia to-day elected 178 members to the National Parliament—about one-third of its entire membership.

Returns received up to midnight indicate that the wildest hopes of the Liberals have been realized, the Constitutional Democrats and other Progressives practically everywhere having gained a tremendous victory over the Octoberists and other Conservative parties. As far as is ascertainable, not a single Reactionary candidate pulled through, and nowhere did even the Octoberists score a success.

The majorities obtained by the Radicals clinch the character of the victory. From the Volga to the frontier of Poland and from the still ice-bound coast of Archangel to the Black Sea the story is substantially the same.

One of the astonishing as well as hopeful signs is the character of many of the peasants elected. Before the electoral college began to elect the members allotted to a province the peasants separately chose one of their number as a member. This provision was designed to appease the peasants, and also was regarded by the Government as insuring a Conservative nucleus; but this calculation has been sadly upset, for in almost every instance the peasants elected are not only Progressives, but the most highly educated among their class, the majority of them having at least a high school education.

In the Volga district and the central provinces, where famine and agrarian disorders have been the greatest, the peasants' vote was the most Radical. In Samara by a vote of 86 to 8 they chose M. Guttandont, a Socialist, while the members elected by the college are a doctor, four Zemstvoists, and five Progressive peasants.

In far-away Ufa, the border territory, the Orenburg Cossacks returned a solid Progressive delegation, consisting of four Russians and six Mussulmans.

Among the prominent persons elected are Prince Balataiteff, the well-known zemstvoist worker of Simbirsk; Prince Shakeffsky of Yaroslav, and Prof. Maxim Kovolevsky of Kharkoff.

While no definite results of the municipal elections held to-day are known, they seem also everywhere to have gone in favor of the Progressives.

To-day's results prove beyond question that the calculations of the Government have been utterly upset, and that the Opposition elements will control the National Parliament by a decisive majority. Premier Witte's efforts to induce Emperor Nicholas to proclaim a constitution should now be greatly reinforced.

Another crisis plainly confronts the Government, for the sweeping character of their victory will undoubtedly encourage the Liberals to push the Government to the wall, and it would seem that the Emperor must yield to the entreaties of those who counsel a final surrender by the issuance of a constitution. There seems no alternative except to disperse the National Parliament as soon as it assembles.

MOSCOW, April 8.—The Moscow municipal election, held to-day, was the culmination of a veritable whirlwind canvass. The result is not yet known, as the votes will not be counted until to-morrow.

Last night meetings were held in all the available public halls and in the streets. The best orators of the Constitutional Democrats, including Prof. Paul M. Miliukoff and M. Hessen, came from St. Petersburg, and hundreds of speeches were made. The Octoberists made a fervid appeal to the voters not to choose Constitutional Democrats, a majority for whom, they declared, would mean the ruin and division of Russia.

The Monarchist workers, pointing to the crosses on the churches, appealed to the voters not to convert the churches into synagogues by electing Judophiles.

The Constitutional Democrats appeared to have the better in the voting and claim a victory.

SAVES NEGRO FROM LYNCHING

Prof. Beeson of Meridian College Persuades a Mob to Disperse.

MERIDIAN, Miss., April 8.—The coolness of Prof. J. F. Beeson of the Meridian College prevented the lynching of a negro who shot and wounded Branscomb Farmer, a street car conductor, in a quarrel over a fare last night.

Early this morning a mob of 100 men and boys traced the negro to the college, where he had been employed. Prof. Beeson secreted the man and argued the mob into dispersing by promising to deliver the negro to the police on Monday.

MAN MYSTERIOUSLY KILLED.

Found Dying by Wife and Stepson with Bullet Wounds in His Body.

EAST HAVEN, Conn., April 8.—Joseph E. Jennings, who, with his wife and a stepson named Talor, lived near Mansfield Grove, lies dead in his home tonight with a bullet hole in his chest and another one in his right side, as a result of a mysterious shooting early this evening. He was found by his wife and stepson lying beside the road, about one-quarter of a mile from his home, and lived long enough after being found, according to Mrs. Jennings, to say that some one had shot him.

Jennings, his wife and stepson had been visiting a married daughter, Mrs. Charles Brockett, who lives on the Foxon Road, about a mile and a half from the centre of East Haven. When Mrs. Jennings and her son left for home, Jennings remained behind, intending to return later. When he had not reached home by 8:30 o'clock to-night, Mrs. Jennings says she and her son started out to look for him. They came upon him a quarter of a mile away from their home.

ROCKEFELLER RIDING AGAIN.

Makes a Call by Auto at Night—A Story of His Oil Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 8.—John D. Rockefeller again failed to appear at the Baptist Church service to-day, although it is not believe that he is ill. Mrs. Rockefeller, gowned in champagne velvet and wearing a white feather boa, attended service with her sister, Miss Lucy Spellman. Afterward she was annoyed by camera men, who tried to snapshot her as she entered her automobile.

On the way home the automobile broke down within a short distance of the entrance to the Rockefeller estate, and Mrs. Rockefeller and her sister were compelled to alight. They were about to walk home when a friend who was passing took them in his automobile.

It became known to-day that Mr. Rockefeller for the last week has been riding about the village in his automobile at night. He made a call on Friday night on Mr. and Mrs. Mapes, who are occupying the cottage of Mr. Rockefeller's daughter, Mrs. Charles A. Strong, during her absence abroad.

Employes of a grocery store in the village are telling their friends a story on Mr. Rockefeller. In the list of supplies for the Rockefeller household on Friday was included a gallon of kerosene. The groceryman charged 14 cents for it. The bill came under Mr. Rockefeller's eye, and he took the groceryman to task over the telephone. The conversation ran something like this:

"This is Mr. Rockefeller. You have charged me too much for oil. Fourteen cents is high, very high."

"Not at all, Mr. Rockefeller. I have to pay 13 cents a gallon for all the oil I get."

"Ah, then, you couldn't charge much less, could you?"

"Couldn't do it and keep the store open," replied the groceryman.

PASTOR SAVES HIS FLOCK.

Gets Them Out of Church Just Before Tornado Hit It.

Special to The New York Times.

COLLINSVILLE, Ill., April 8.—A tornado passed across the southwest corner of Madison County this afternoon and struck the centre of the town of St. Jacob. It tore to pieces a church just vacated.

St. Jacob is a town of 500 people, twenty-eight miles from St. Louis. Shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, a funnel-shaped cloud appeared in the north and moved rapidly toward the town.

In the German Lutheran Church Palm Sunday services were being held. The pastor, the Rev. P. Meyer, was in the midst of his services when he glanced through an open window and saw the storm coming. He closed the Bible with a bang and told the congregation to flee. There were a hundred people in the brick building. They quickly got out. Hardly had they cleared the building when the tornado struck it. The building was literally dissolved in a whirl of brick and timbers. Nobody was hurt.

In the Vandalia Railroad yards a freight train was on a siding. The tornado picked two loaded freight cars out of the centre of the train, carried them across several tracks and dumped them into a creek.

CREW'S SUFFERINGS IN BOAT.

Steward of the Schooner Tuck Succumbs to Exposure.

YARMOUTH, N. S., April 8.—With the five survivors of the well-known Tern coasting schooner W. E. & W. L. Tuck, which was abandoned off Cape Sable last Thursday, there was brought ashore today the body of Charles Wilstead, the steward of the vessel, who perished in the ship's long boat after many hours of exposure. The others also suffered intensely, as they were all thinly clad. The steam trawler Spray picked them up yesterday afternoon.

The W. E. & W. L. Tuck sailed from Bridgewater, N. S., for New York with a load of lumber the first of the week. After getting from under the lee of the Nova Scotia shore on Thursday, a succession of heavy northeast squalls were encountered, as well as a heavy sea. In the afternoon a squall considerably harder than the others struck the vessel and turned her over, and the entire crew of six men found themselves struggling in the water. They were greatly surprised when, as the squall went by, the Tuck righted herself. They managed to get aboard, but found the vessel waterlogged, and were unable to obtain either food or clothing.

As the Tuck was in great danger of being thrown down again by a squall, the men decided to take to the long boat. In that little craft they remained for two days without food, water, and with scarcely anything to protect them from the biting wind. Steward Wilstead died late Friday night. Saturday afternoon the Spray sighted the survivors.

SHOT HIS WIFE AT DANCE.

Gunkel, Sued for Divorce, Then Shot Himself—Both Will Live.

Mrs. Otto Gunkel of 503 East Eighteenth Street, who brought suit for divorce the other day, was one of the 200 young men and women who started in the grand march at the ball of the Star Social Club, at the Grand Lyceum, 85 Forsyth Street, last night. Just as the band struck up Gunkel walked into the hall and up to his wife.

"Say," he said, "is life sweet to you?"

"Sure," she replied; "quit your kiddin'."

"You've got a right to stop those proceedings," said Gunkel.

She said she would not stop them. Then he pulled a revolver and shot his wife in the right breast. She fell to the floor, and he then fired a bullet into the right side of his head. The crowd started for him, but he plunged out and ran into the street.

Roundsman Maas and Policeman Quaick caught him before he got far. He and his wife were taken to Gouverneur Hospital, the man as a prisoner. It was said that they would both recover. The dance went on after the shooting.

KILLED BY A POLICEMAN.

Saloonkeeper and Friends Resented an Order for Sunday Closing.

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y., April 8.—William Cullen, a saloon keeper at Broadway and Division Street, was shot and killed to-day by Policeman Owen Feeney.

Feeney had ordered Cullen to close his saloon. The shooting is said to have occurred after the saloonkeeper and some of his friends had attacked the policeman and beaten him with his own club.

BOOM FOR W. J. BRYAN IN DEMOCRATIC CLUB

Committee Thinks He's the Man to Beat Hearstism.

HE WILL RENOUNCE 16 TO 1

Address to Voters Ready—Jefferson Dinner Speakers May Speak for the Former Candidate.

Plans for "Nationalizing" the Democratic Club have developed so far that the club probably will be renamed the National Democratic Club by the 1st of May, with an address scattered broadcast to Democrats in all States and sections urging them to join the club and work to establish the party on a safe and sane basis to fight radicalism and Socialism. Many of the leading members of the club believe that the organization should support William J. Bryan as the next Presidential candidate, believing Mr. Bryan sufficiently conservative to combat the radicals of the present time successfully.

The sub-committee of the club appointed to draw up the address to voters and to frame up the plan for nationalizing the organization met yesterday. The subcommittee agreed unanimously to the plan, as did the Board of Governors at a meeting held last week, and the full plan with the draft of the address to voters will be presented to the full committee to-morrow evening. It is said that the plan will be indorsed as outlined, and the entire matter then will come before the members of the club at the meeting on April 25.

The address to voters will be made public after the committee meeting to-morrow night. It does not refer to William R. Hearst by name, but attacks the principles he represents.

Leading members of the club said yesterday that they and party leaders in other sections think that the conservatives of the country should combine on Bryan as a candidate as the best way to defeat Hearstism and the kindred isms. They urge that Mr. Bryan is a conservative as compared with most of the ultra-radicals going around the country, except possibly for his old doctrine of 16 to 1. And as to this it has been learned on authority that Mr. Bryan will make it plainly known, when he returns to this country, that he has dropped that theory for all time.

A friend of Mr. Bryan's is responsible for the statement that Mr. Bryan will, either in a personal interview or in his paper, state that although he believed in the principle during his two campaigns he considers that the entire question has been relegated to oblivion by the great productions of gold since that time, and no longer is under consideration as an issue. The Democratic Club men believe this statement will surely rally the conservative Democrats to Mr. Bryan, and that they, joining with his personal following, can easily nominate and elect him.

In addition to the boom that Bryan will get through the nationalizing of the club, he is expected to receive further aid at the Jefferson dinner, which the club will hold next Monday night in the main ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. President John Fox of the club will preside. President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton will speak on "Jefferson"; Mayor McClellan will speak on "Democracy"; Judson Harmon of President Cleveland's Cabinet will speak on "Essentials of Democracy"; United States Senator John M. Gearin of Oregon will speak on "Jefferson and the West," and Congressman W. Bourke Cockran will speak on a subject not yet announced. The Rev. Dr. Wilford L. Robbins, Dean of the General Theological Seminary, will also speak. Presiding Justice Morgan J. O'Brien of the Appellate Division is Chairman of the Dinner Committee and in charge of all arrangements.

RUN ON BANK BY LIQUOR MEN.

Try to Wreck Institution Whose Cashier Is a Temperance Worker.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON COURT HOUSE, Ohio, April 8.—Because the cashier allied himself with the temperance element, saloon keepers at Lynchburg tried to wreck the Lynchburg Bank.

The temperance people have been trying to enlist enough voters to hold a local option election, but failed until William Stautener, cashier of the bank, became actively identified with the "dry" movement. The saloon keepers warned him not to become involved in the fight, threatening to ruin him if he worked against them. He turned a deaf ear to their warnings. Saturday the saloon keepers withdrew $4,000 of trust funds carried by the bank. The saloon keepers and their friends withdrew their deposits until $20,000 was taken out.

A hurry-up call for money was sent to Cincinnati, and $50,000 arrived in time to prevent a crash. The saloon keepers threaten to renew the run on the bank Monday.

MAGISTRATE TURNS SLEUTH.

Moss Spoils the Game of Pickpockets on a Street Car.

Magistrate Moss regarded the prisoner arraigned before him yesterday morning with more than usual interest. There were twenty-seven of them, in various stages of poverty and prosperity, but the Magistrate was plainly disappointed when he scrutinized the last man before discharging him. He gave the following reasons for his disappointment:

"I was on the rear platform of a Twenty-ninth Street crosstown car last night," he said. "There were five men already on the platform. I noticed that one of the men was blocking the entrance to the car by holding to the doors and crowding passengers getting on. At Third Avenue a well dressed man, accompanied by a woman, forced his way into the car after great trouble. At Lexington Avenue two young, alert-looking men jumped on. I heard them speak to the man who was blocking the way, and he answered them.

"Followed by the newcomers he went into the car. I went in after them, for I felt they were up to mischief.

"I asked the man who got on with the woman at Third Avenue to see if he had been robbed. He did, and said that he had not. Then I asked a couple of Catholic priests. They had not been robbed either. But I was sure of my men just the same.

"'Now look here, you three men,' I said, 'I know what kind of a game you fellows are up to. You get off this car as quickly as you know how. I am a Magistrate in this city, and if you don't get out I shall arrest you.' The men rushed out of the car. I had hoped that they, or at least one of them, would be in the collection this morning."

CARNEGIE LOST TRAIN RACE.

RICHMOND, Va., April 8.—Andrew Carnegie to-day made a record-breaking run on a specially chartered train from Richmond to Gordonsville in a futile effort to catch up with the regular train for Hot Springs, which was Mr. Carnegie's destination. Mr. Carnegie arrived in Richmond forty-five minutes after the Hot Springs regular train had left, and it had started from Gordonsville only a few minutes when Mr. Carnegie's special slowed down there.

Mr. Carnegie complimented the train crew for their efforts in his behalf. It is not known why he was in such haste to reach Hot Springs.

TO BE A GIRL BY LEGISLATION.

That's the Only Way to Help a Baby Made a Boy in Baptism.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 8.—A mistake in the baptizing of a child may cause an act of Legislature to be passed changing the name of James Edward McLaughlin, Jr., to Hazel McLaughlin.

The mistake was caused by the doctor remarking to the grandmother that the baby was a fine chap. The grandmother, who had the privilege of naming the youngster, called him after the father. The mistake was not discovered until the child was taken home from church.

The grandmother hastened back to the church to have the mistake corrected, but Father McKean, who christened the girl, said he was powerless either to rebaptize the baby or change the record. An act of Legislature is the only way in which the error can be remedied.

HISTORIC OAK BURNED.

Under It Lord Pell Signed a Treaty with the Indians.

The historic Pell Oak, a fine old tree, eighty feet high, at the junction of the New Rochelle and Prospect Hill Roads, under which Lord Pell stood when he signed a treaty with the Indians early in the eighteenth century, for the property now comprising the northeastern section of the Bronx, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning.

Several years ago the Park Commission had a fence put around the tree, which began to show signs of decay, in order to make it last as long as possible. Recently a pile of dead leaves and brush accumulated within the fence, and it is supposed that some one threw a lighted cigar or cigarette there, starting the blaze. Before any one could put the fire out the flames spread to the tree and burned it to a blackened stump.

FIRE ALARM WIRES CUT.

A Contractor Accused of Crippling Forty-seven Alarm Boxes.

Mattio Capobianco of 3,400 Third Avenue, a contractor, was before Magistrate Breen in the Westchester Court yesterday charged by James McNulty, a Fire Department lineman, with having cut wires connected with forty-seven fire alarm boxes last Friday. The wires were in the way of a wall that Capobianco is building at 237th Street and Webster Avenue.

Magistrate Breen, after looking up the Penal Code, could not find a section dealing with such a case, and paroled Capobianco until this morning. Magistrate Wahle will then be sitting.

TO SAVE BOSSCHIETER GANG.

Pardons Sought for Kerr and Campbell—Poor Health the Plea.

PATERSON, N. J., April 8.—Application has been made to the Court of Pardons for a pardon for George Kerr, convicted of causing the death of Jennie Bosschieter at Paterson some years ago, and now in the State prison. Poor health is given as the reason. The appeal will come up in April. Friends of Andrew Campbell, convicted for the same crime, are also endeavoring to get a hearing. No action has yet been begun for the release of the third man, William Death. McAllister, the fourth in the gang, is also still in jail.

IRON STRIKE CRISIS MAY 1.

The Housesmiths Hope for Support of Other Building Unions Then.

The officers of the Housesmiths' Union announced yesterday that they will make a supreme effort to bring their fight of the union against the open shop to a crisis on May 1, when the building season is supposed to begin. They expect that the other building trades unions will then demand that the open shop declaration against the Housesmiths' Union be recalled by the Allied Iron Associations, and strike if it is not.

AUTO HAS A LIVELY TIME.

Steering Gear Breaks and It Hangs Itself Over a Cliff.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., April 8.—W. F. Cronan of New York this afternoon had a bad few minutes in an automobile, which was barely saved from a drop of twenty feet off a ledge.

Cronan was taking the car from Stamford to New York. On Puts Hill, the steepest between New York and New Haven, the steering gear was broken in crossing a trolley track. The car was going at thirty miles an hour at the time. When the break came it gyrated about the highway a bit and then dashed into an iron rail placed to prevent people falling off the cliff.

The iron rail was broken, and the car caused the rocks to tumble down the steep. Its hind wheels luckily got tangled in the iron fence rail and Mr. Cronan clung to the steering wheel, over which he was thrown. He was extricated from his position by other motorists and went on to New York, leaving the car hanging to the fence.

TEWKSBURY MISSING AGAIN.

Philadelphia Police Think He Has Fled to Baltimore.

PHILADELPHIA, April 8.—Lewis G. Tewksbury, who is wanted in New York on a charge of grand larceny and has been ordered returned to the custody of the authorities of that city, could not be found to-day. A Deputy Sheriff and two detectives made an unavailing search for him, and the local police officials express the belief that he has gone to Baltimore. His photograph and description will be sent out, with the request that he be arrested on sight.

Tewksbury was recently arrested in this city at the request of the New York authorities, and released on bail in $1,000 pending habeas corpus proceedings. The court dismissed the application and ordered Tewksbury surrendered to the Sheriff of New York, where Tewksbury is under indictment on charges preferred by his former wife.

RUIN BY VESUVIUS; TERROR IN NAPLES

Two Severe Earthquakes—Fumes Make Breathing Difficult.

BIG TOWNS ARE EVACUATED

No Trace of Bosco Trecase—Lava Surrounds Torre dell'Annunziata —Observatory Gone.

NAPLES, April 8.—The hope that Mount Vesuvius was becoming calm was dissipated to-day, when the volcano became more active than ever.

The panic has spread to Naples. Two severe earthquake shocks, which shattered window panes and cracked the walls of buildings, were experienced to-day.

The entire population rushed to the streets in terror, many persons crying: "The Madonna has forsaken us! The end of the world has come!"

Breathing is momentarily becoming more difficult because of the poisonous fumes and smoke.

Naples bears an aspect of desolation, everything being covered with ashes from the volcano.

The atmosphere is heavily charged with electricity, and now and then flashes of lightning are blinding, while the detonations from the volcano are terrifying.

The churches of this city were open all last night, and were crowded with panic-stricken people. The clergy are doing their utmost to cal mthe people's fears.

Prisoners in jails on the mountain side mutinied. They were only partially quieted by being brought here. Their fears have now been communicated to the prisoners here, who may rebel at any moment.

No trace remains of Bosco Trecase, a commune on the southern declivity of the mountain, where up to forty-eight hours ago 10,000 persons lived.

Torre dell'Annunziata, on the shore of the Gulf of Naples, one mile to the southward of Bosco Trecase, is almost surrounded by the invading lava, and has been evacuated by its 30,000 inhabitants. The people were brought to Naples by trains, street cars, military carts, and steamships. The lava has up to now destroyed a few houses outside Torre dell'Annunziata. The flow has now ceased there.

Transportation facilities have been sent to Torre del Greco to take away the people. The police and carbineers are guarding the abandoned houses, and several members of the Government also are there. The flow of lava there, however, has also ceased.

A telegram received from the Mayor of San Sebastiano, a village near where the observatory stood, on the northwest declivity of Vesuvius, says the lava is approaching rapidly, and the people are terror-stricken. They have been for nights without sleep, are destitute, and beg that assistance be given to them.

The work of succor is hampered owing to delays to the railway service, which is interrupted by red-hot stones thrown to a height of 3,000 feet falling on the tracks.

Incandescent material has set fire to the village of San Giuseppe.

The observatory on Vesuvius has been destroyed, and Signor Matteucci, the director, and the employes had narrow escapes. They passed last night in the darkness, save for the frequent flashes of lightning, as the gas works and electric plant had been destroyed.

The restaurant of the Funicular Railroad has been obliterated.

The danger and horror of the situation aside, Vesuvius presents one of the most splendid sights imaginable. The mountain of fire seems like an enraged giant determined to make the ypgmies of earth feel the might of his wrath. Here and there on the mountainside stand the blasted trunks of pine trees, their bare branches outstretched as though in protest against the devastation the volcano has wrought.

As yet it is impossible to count the craters that have opened and from which streams of lava have flooded the beautiful, prosperous, and happy land lying on the southeast shore of the Gulf of Naples.

Contrary to expectations, the sea has not yet shown signs of being affected, but fears are entertained that tidal waves may yet come, and many craft have put to sea. Visitors to Naples are avoiding the hotels on the sea front, and the people living there are beginning to leave for higher altitudes.

Though there is much misery, up to the present time there have been no fatalities except at Portici, where an old woman died, supposedly from fright.

POPE GREATLY DISTRESSED.

Tells Cardinal Prisco to Distribute Relief to Victims.

ROME, April 8.—Pope Pius is greatly distressed by the calamity wrought by thte eruption of Mount Vesuvius. In talking to his secretary to-day he said: "These are moments when my imprisonment is irksome."

His Holiness personally will not be able to go to the scene, but he has sent a letter to Cardinal Prisco, Archbishop of Naples, expressing his grief for the sufferers and instructing him to distribute relief among them and to send to the Vatican particulars of the eruption.

WORST OUTBREAK IN 1800 YEARS

The Present the Severest Eruption Since Pompeii Was Destroyed.

The present eruption of Vesuvius is apparently the most violent since A. D. 79, up to which time the volcanic nature of the mountain had been unsuspected.

The mountain is about ten miles from Naples and rises to an elevation of 4,000 feet. Around the base it is about 30 miles in circumference. It was on Aug. 24, A. D. 79, that the first recorded eruption occurred. Then the mountain practically blew up. Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed, the former town being buried under twenty feet of lava, and Herculaneum under a torrent of mud.

In the first thousand years after the great eruption of 79 there were many eruptions, but not of a very serious nature. One, in 472, sent up a shower of ashes that traveled as far as Constantinople.

After an eruption in 1066 the mountain was quiet for nearly 600 years. Then, in 1631, many lives were lost when the volcano again became violently active, and covered the villages surrounding the base with lava and drenched them with boiling water. The next eruption occurred in 1779, when stones, mud, and scoriae were thrown to a tremendous height.

One of the towns near the base of the mountain, Torre del Greco, was completely destroyed in 1794, while the mountain blew off 800 feet of its own top when it exploded in 1822.

During the last century the mountain was very active, but did little damage. There was an eruption in 1855, a series of eruptions ten years later, an eruption in 1872, and violent explosions in 1878 and 1880. Save for a slight disturbance in 1895, the mountain caused no alarm until the Martinique disaster in 1902. Then some fear was felt that Vesuvius was about to be disturbed in sympathy. This did not happen to any extent, however, and the following year, 1903, passed over with only a few mud eruptions in the hot months.

Last year the mountain again began to show uneasiness. In June the Prefect of Naples considered it advisable for the inhabitants of the villages around the base to leave their homes owing to the increased discharges of lava from the volcano. In October earthquakes destroyed 300 villages in the Province of Calabria, and the mountain showed unrest, apparently in sympathy with the seismic disturbances. The eruption passed, however, with the earthquakes.

The Royal Meteorological Observatory on Mount Vesuvius was situated nearly 2,000 feet above the level of the sea on Colle Canteroni, a ridge which in past eruptions of the volcano has separated the lava streams into two branches. The scientific deductions made by the observers there have often been the means of warning the people of impending eruptions, and doubtless have resulted in the saving of many lives. At the entrance to the observatory was a tablet erected to the memory of the tourists who lost their lives in April, 1872, while watching the eruption from the Atrio del Cavallo crater.

Dispatches from Naples on Saturday mentioned an American engineer named Perret as being with Director Matteucci in the observatory.

Dean N. S. Shaler Better.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 8.—The physicians attending Dean N. S. Shaler of the Lawrence Scientific School, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia at his home here for the last week, expressed themselves to-night as considerably encouraged by the gain their patient had made. He is still very ill, however, the physicians say.

UNTERMYER ATTACKS THE PEABODY FORCES

Calls the Mutual's President Figurehead of Financiers.

SCOFFS AT McCURDY SUITS

Never Will Be Brought to Trial, He Predicts, for They Would Render Others Liable.

Samuel Untermyer, counsel for the International Association of Policy Holders in the Mutual and New York Life Insurance Companies, made public yesterday a letter written by him to Thomas H. D. Berridge of London. In it he charges that Charles A. Peabody, President of the Mutual, is the nominee of the Standard Oil-J. P. Morgan-Harriman interests in the Mutual Life; that he knows nothing of insurance; that the suits the Mutual has brought against the McCurdys are not to be pushed, and that an attempt is being made to deceive the public.

Mr. Berridge, as counsel for the English policy holders in the Mutual, is associated with Mr. Untermyer. The Berridge letter was given out by the latter, as a rejoinder to the letter written by President Peabody to D. C. Haldeman, the Mutual's manager in London, in which he denies that he is the Standard Oil's choice.

Here is Mr. Untermyer's letter:

"Referring to our previous correspondence, the following is my understanding of the facts with respect to Mr. Charles A. Peabody, the recently designated President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, which you are at liberty to repeat to the gentlemen with whom you are in negotiation on this subject:

"Mr. Peabody was, until he assumed the office a few months ago, a member of the law firm of Baker & Peabody, practicing lawyers, in this city. He has never been an active practitioner, but has always borne a reputation for unquestioned integrity. His partner, Mr. Fisher A. Baker, is well known as a lawyer and is highly esteemed as a man. He is an uncle of George F. Baker, who is the President and the principal owner of the First National Bank, which is generally recognized in the financial world as a Morgan-Standard Oil bank, by reason of the very close relations that have for many years existed between that bank, J. P. Morgan & Co., and the Standard Oil group. Mr. George F. Baker is, and has been for many years, the Chairman of the Finance Committee and Mr. Henry H. Rogers the Chairman of the Agency Committee of the Mutual Life. Mr. Rogers is to-day the dominant factor in Standard Oil, and deservedly so, for he is a man of great ability and force of character, whose word may be relied upon.

Financial Connections.

"Mr. Peabody's firm is the counsel for Mr. Baker and the First National Bank, and its relations as such with the financial affairs of this group are very close. Mr. Peabody is also a Director of the Union Pacific, Illinois Central, and other corporations in which Mr. Harriman is interested with Mr. Baker, Mr. Rogers, and the Standard Oil group, and is generally regarded as their representative in at least some of these boards. He is recognized as a spokesman for these interests. Mr. Peabody is not familiar with the insurance business. Prior to his selection as President he had not come in contact with the business in any form, not even as counsel for an insurance company. He is universally recognized as the figurehead of this financial group, which seems to have been able to control a great property in which they have no interest, and notwithstanding the reign of corruption that flourished under their régime.

"Mr. Peabody's selection was due entirely to the domination of the Baker-Rogers influence in the board, and it may be safely said that he is their nominee and that they are supporting him. The suits begun under his administration against Mr. McCurdy and members of the latter's family (you will note that none has been begun against others) are not intended to be prosecuted, and for obvious reasons. If it be judicially established in these suits, as has already been admitted, that Mr. McCurdy paid and authorized millions of dollars for political contributions to influence legislation, covering a period of years, the liability of Mr. Baker as Chairman of the Finance Committee is at the same time fixed. Mr. McCurdy, if pressed, may be unwilling longer to bear the burden of responsibility, and will perhaps disclose the knowledge of his associates of these transactions.

"But whether they were active parties to these corrupt payments or permitted them through neglect of their duties, they are equally liable. The same may be said of the enormous sums paid to the McCurdys, son and son-in-law, through the agency contracts. It is inconceivable that the Agency Committee, which was specially charged with this duty, did not know of these contracts. It is difficult to say whether their liability is greater if they approved them than if they were ignorant of them.

Liability in the Mutual.

"In either case their liability will be established if the company succeeds in the suits these gentlemen have directed to be instituted.

"The policy holders may well be pardoned for questioning the motives of suits brought and controlled under such auspices. We are satisfied that the suits were instituted so as to anticipate and secure control of litigation which they knew was inevitable in the light of the disclosures, either by the policy holders or by the Attorney General, and to keep the suits out of hostile hands. They are hardly likely vigorously to prosecute suits which will eventually establish their own liability.

"I am satisfied that further investigation, which the brief time allowed the Armstrong Committee did not permit, will disclose further grounds of liability on the part of the present management. But these investigations must be made under a new, clean administration in no way allied with the management through whose wrongs and neglect the policy holders have already suffered so heavily.

"The objections to Mr. Peabody are not personal. They are based upon his affiliations, the interests to which he owed his present position, and to his ignorance of the insurance business, all combining to render him quite as impossible for the place as would be the retention of the old management.

"Discoveries."

"Our friends on your side must on no account permit themselves or the policy holders to be misled by the newspaper reports which are being circulated on your side by the industrious press bureau which these gentlemen are working overtime. You will find Mr. Peabody writing letters which he gives out for publication, issuing interviews by the yard, his 'investigating' committee publishing reports 'discovering' corruption in the company long since exposed not only without their aid, but in spite of them—all for the purpose of creating the false impression that these gentlemen are bent upon exposing their own wickedness.

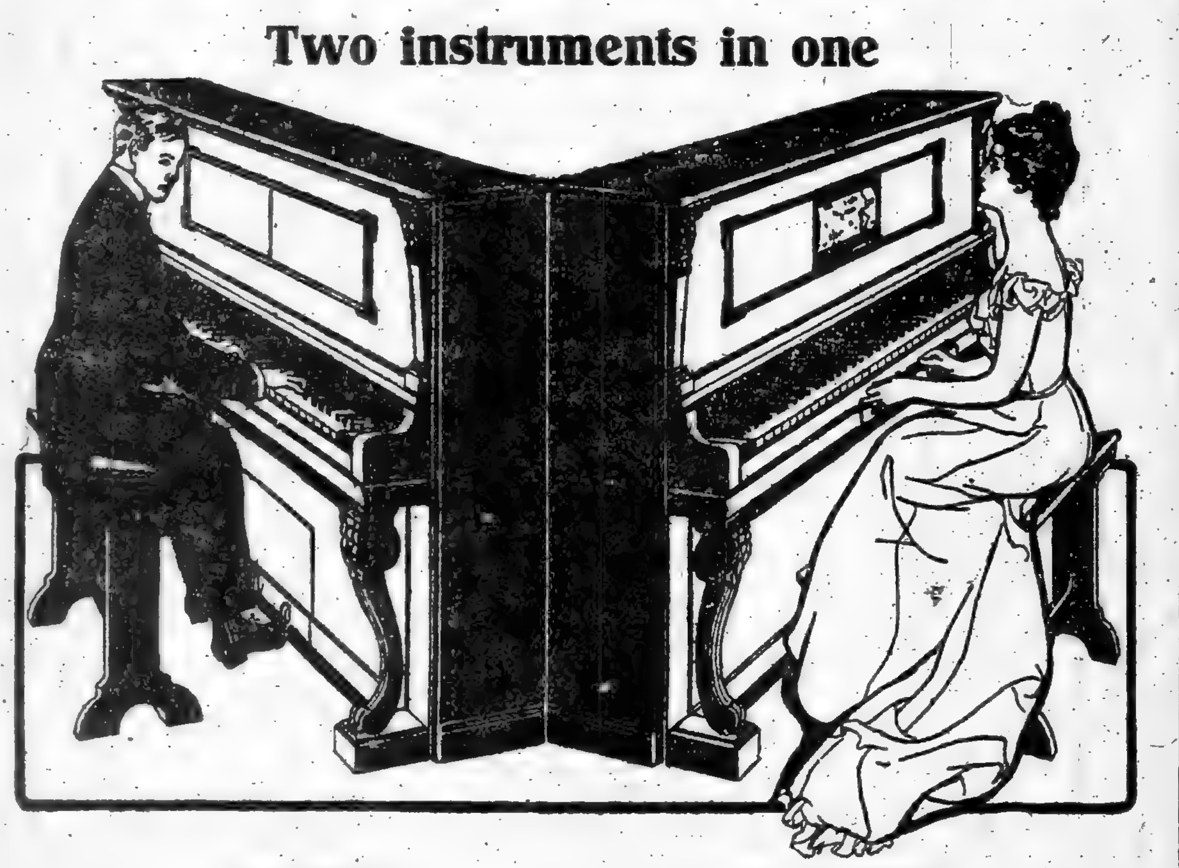
"The game is an interesting one and comparatively simple if it can be played alone with no one to expose it. The stakes are heavy, immunity on the one hand, as against prosecution on the other. It is a test case to determine the extent to which a body of the shrewdest men in the country, who are in a pretty deep hole of their own making, can humbug the public and lift themselves out by their own bootstraps over the shoulders of the policy holders whom they have wronged. If they succeed this time, with all the safeguards now thrown around the policy holders' exercise of their right to control the company, no further sympathy need be wasted on them. They will deserve all that has happened and may happen to them.

"Sincerely yours,

"SAMUEL UNTERMYER."

The Pianola Piano

Two instruments in one



The Pianist

Can play the Pianola Piano by hand exactly the same as though there were no Pianola built in it. In the details of touch, tone and all other essentials that go to make up a high-grade piano nothing is left to be desired.

The Non-Musician

Can play the Pianola Piano by means of a regular Pianola music-roll. Thus he at once becomes master of all the music that can be rendered by the most skilled pianist—from classic to popular.

The change from one method of playing to the other is instantaneous

THE purchase of a Pianola Piano is in reality the purchase of two instruments. The complete Metrostyle Pianola—"the world's standard piano-player"—has been incorporated in a high-grade piano. Thus, to all the advantages of the best hand-played piano are added the unlimited resources of the Pianola.

One view of the Pianola Piano (as shown above on the left) presents the usual outward appearance of a regular upright piano. But lower the pedals and open the sliding panel in the front of the case, and you may play any piece in the Pianola's enormous repertory (see view on the right).

The Pianola Piano costs no more than would a Piano of equal grade and the Metrostyle Pianola when bought in the form of separate instruments. This is the instrument that is revolutionizing the entire piano trade. If you count yourself as a music-lover, and are dissatisfied with the quality or quantity of music that you have at present in your home, it is almost an imperative duty to investigate the Pianola Piano—and to investigate it NOW.

Let us send you the interesting Art Book of the Pianola Piano, or, better still, call and have the instrument played and explained for you in person.

Pianos of other makes received in part payment at their valuation. The genuine Pianola Piano is on exhibition in but one place in Manhattan—Aeolian Hall.

HUGHES ENCOURAGED BY PUBLIC SENTIMENT

Moral Sense of the People Vindicated by Insurance Inquiry

HIGHER PATRIOTISM COMING

This Will Support the Law as Well as the Flag, He Tells the Ethical Culture Society.

Seth Low and Charles E. Hughes discussed the insurance disclosures yesterday morning before the Ethical Culture Society in Carnegie Hall. They did not dwell on the results, which in the words of the Chairman, John Frankenheimer, had destroyed three insurance dynasties and created an epoch in the history of the country, but pointed the moral of the revelations for Americans in general.

"There are three aspects of the question," said Mr. Low, "which will afford useful thought for all. Campaign contributions should be prohibited for all corporations, unless their charters recognize them."

Mr. Low then criticised in scathing terms the dishonesty of incomplete and misleading bookkeeping.

"Something curiously inconsistent," he added, "strikes me about the idea of trusteeship which the investigation showed. The improper use of money to influence legislation was justified on the plea that as long as the people put blackmailers into office a Trustee was forced to violate his conscience in the interests of his trust. Yet it was also shown that some men had made money for themselves from their control of the trust funds.

"We need a higher conception of trusteeship. If men will not give the time to serve others as Trustees they ought not to become the Trustees."

Mr. Hughes started by saying:

"Perhaps the most striking result of the inquiry just concluded is that it is a vindication of the sound moral sense of the American people. It was public sentiment that demanded the insurance investigation, that supported the committee in its effort to ascertain the truth, and to dealt justly, and it is public sentiment that makes imperative the reforms that are now in progress. The people have determined that the crooked paths shall be made straight. They are relentless in their demands that those who have been faithless to their trust shall be exposed and branded, and that the great funds upon which we depend for the security of our homes shall be administered as a public trust by those who are content with the just rewards of fidelity.

"It is in response to this demand that the work which was prosecuted so far as the committee was able to prosecute it has been taken up by those charged with the duties of corporate administration. That which a short time ago was derided as an ex parte presentation of the facts now appears in the formal report of Boards of Directors. The remedies which a very little time ago were treated as visionary now receive the support of expert opinion within the companies themselves.

"Now this public sentiment which has wrought so much was not created by a demagogue; it was not the product of indiscriminate abuse; it was not the reward of ill-advised censure of men or methods. It was in response to a common sense of justice after the presentation of facts. Those who have been surprised at the persistence of the public interest in this matter have failed to take account of the moral earnestness of our people. When the American people are convinced that a great wrong exists there will be no rest on their part until that wrong is righted, and righted through the laws of justice, and by an impartial and fair use of those means at the command of organized society for investigation and for redress.

"Charges and counter-charges made in an irresponsible manner fall short of their intended effect; even where they are not altogether groundless they create a reaction of opinion because of the lack of convincing evidence. In these days you cannot make the walls of Jericho fall down by walking around them with a blare of trumpets, but the battering rams of facts are your most effective instruments.

"Sydney Smith once said, 'There is no hope of making those contented whose aim is not to be contented,' and there is no fear of discontent in this country when matters that affect the public can be discussed intelligently after the facts are apprehended, and public opinion is allowed to take its course. And the demonstration that the people are determined upon a righteous conduct of business, and that the way to secure needed reforms is to appeal to the sober sense of the people, enhances our National self-respect.

"I want also to observe that it seems to me that it has given to the ordinary man, the man in the street, a truer sense of value. A great deal has been worthily said on the comparatively few advantages of great wealth, but the truth is that few, except the very rich, appreciate the justice of the argument. But of late I think that the man who is earning his bread by honest toil, the man who has amassed a modest competency by fair means, the man who has gained his success, whether it be great or small, in any field, without doing violence to his conscience, and who has nothing to fear from an examination of his record, walks with a new sense of dignity. There is less envy of those who have profited by devious ways. The uncertainty of the rewards of dishonor stand out in very bold relief. We have seen the insurance President of the relatively small company striving to hold to his ideas when crowded by his great rivals, and by their conspicuous success, whose example perhaps has been constantly paraded before him—we have seen him emerge a man from among the weak, and he who but a short time ago was lost sight of because of his narrow sphere now appears to be a conspicuous success.

"Sad indeed have been the wrecks of the last year. Tragic has been the fall of many who endeared themselves by charming qualities to many men. But powerful has been the warning to the young men of America from the fate that has overtaken them at the full tide of their apparent prosperity."

Mr. Hughes then said in substance that there was some excuse for Directors who had been negligent. The excuse was that they had found it easy to be negligent—had been benumbed. He added:

"Sometimes the question comes to us whether we have that real patriotism which consists of an appreciation of the institutions which make our country great. There is plenty of patriotism in love of country; in that instinctive love of country you can draw no line between rich and poor, between those who are engaged in corporate enterprise and those who are not. Let the flag be endangered and the money will pour in from both rich and poor alike, and both will spring to the help of the country. The rich man's son is the same as the poor man's son when they reach camp.

"We men of education, we men of large experience in affairs, we men of trained minds, can we not look for something more than this instinctive love of country? Can we not look for that love of patriotism which rests upon an understanding of our institutions and a desire that they shall be preserved from violences of any sort, from the men who seek to corrupt the legislators and to get from the public that for which they did not give an adequate return—for real patriotism?"

FIELDS NOT READY YET.

But He Will Issue a Statement on Insurance for All to Read.

It may be two weeks before Andrew C. Fields is ready to prepare a statement for the public as to his attitude toward the Mutual Life Insurance Company. Mr. Fields's physician, D. C. H. Judson, said this yesterday at his home in Clinton Avenue, Dobb's Ferry.

Dr. Judson said that his patient was steadily improving, and that he was considering the making of a statement, but that his health was not yet good enough for the task of outlining the part he had played in insurance.

"[illegible] newspapers may be [illegible] of," said Dr. Judson, "and that is that they will be notified in plenty of time. When Mr. Fields does make a statement, he wishes it to be given the [illegible]

WOMAN SUICIDE IN HOSPITAL.

Coroner Says Margaret Barrie Drank Chloroform at the Willard Parker.

Mrs. Margaret Barrie, a ward maid at the Willard Parker Hospital, died suddenly there last night. Coroner Harburger says she committed suicide by drinking chloroform in her room.

The woman, who had been employed at the hospital for five years, finished her duties about 10:30 o'clock last night and went to her room. Ten minutes later two other women employes heard groans and found Mrs. Barrie suffering greatly.

When asked what was the matter she shook her head. Then she asked for a glass of milk. Dr. Henry H. Laynah, head house physician, was sent for, but the woman died five minutes after he arrived. Before dying she denied that she had taken anything, but, according to Coroner Harburger, the evidences of chloroform poisoning were unmistakable. An autopsy will be performed to-day.

Mrs. Barrie left a number of letters and a sum of money in her room. Coroner Harburger said that attaches of the hospital had hindered his efforts to learn the details of the woman's death, and he threatened to cause the arrest of some of them if there was further interference.

Mrs. Barrie was a widow, and leaves a daughter 13 years old, whose address was not known at the hospital last night. It is said that the woman's sister committed suicide by throwing herself in the East River about six months ago, and that a brother was killed by an elevated train not more than a year ago.

SAYS POLICEMAN BEAT HIM.

"Special Officer" on the Elevated Charged with a Brutal Clubbing.

After hearing the evidence in a case in which James Lynch, 22 years old, of 1,687 Bathgate Avenue, was charged with intoxication by Special Policeman T. D. Coffee of the Bronx Park station of the elevated road, Magistrate Breen in the Westchester Court yesterday morning discharged Lynch and told Coffee that he did not believe his story.

According to the policeman, Lynch arrived at the station early yesterday morning, and wanted to be taken back on the train without paying his fare. The conductor of the train put him out on the platform and turned him over to Coffee. Coffee said that Lynch picked up a cuspidor and threw it at him, cutting him over the eye.

Lynch told Magistrate Breen that he was not intoxicated. He said that he had been up all night, and that, being very tired, he had passed his station while asleep. When the train arrived at Bronx Park, Coffee and the conductor threw him out on the platform. While lying there, Lynch alleges that Coffee beat him about the head and body with his club until he became unconscious. When he came to he was in Fordham Hospital, he said.

SACKEY FACES NEW CHARGE.

Arlbert Sackey, who was arrested several days ago on a charge of selling tapestries valued at $1,500, the property of Miss Clare E. Page of 244 West Fifty-sixth Street, was discharged yesterday morning in the West Side Court by Magistrate Wahle, but immediately rearrested on a charge of larceny made by Miss Page. On this complaint he was held in $1,500 bail for examination to-morrow in the Tombs Court.

Sackey frequented the Waldorf-Astoria and was supposed to hold valuable contracts with the Egyptian Government for the supply of horses. Miss Page alleged that Sackey misrepresented a contract he signed with her and she gave him tapestries valued at $1,500 to be sold in St. Louis. Instead of selling them, she alleged, he pawned them for $150. In his examination it was brought out by the prosecution that Sackey had no contracts with the Egyptian Government.

Magistrate Wahle discharged Sackey on the charge based on the sale of the tapestries, on the ground that if any crime had been committed it had been committed in Missouri. The new charge is based on the contract with Miss Page.

100,000 AT CONEY.

Fight for Car Seats—Barkers Busy—Other Signs of the Season.

With a bright sky overhead and a warm westerly wind Coney Island entertained fully 100,000 visitors yesterday. Early in the morning the basket parties began arriving, and long before noon the beaches were strewn with pleasure seekers.

Surf Avenue, from Sea Gate to West Third Street, resembled Third Avenue at full tide, and the police had to form a traffic squad. On the cars men fought with each other, and trampled over women and children in their scramble for seats.

Deputy Fire Commissioner Weiss and Deputy Chief Lally were early visitors, and after inspecting the firehouses and the new salt-water mains, journeyed down to Sea Gate to look at a proposed site for another firehouse, which is soon to be established. Acting Inspector O'Connor was another visitor, and with Police Captain Patrick Harkins made a tour of the Island.

The barkers and ballyhoo men were in all their glory, and the crowd was in a spending mood.

ALL AGAINST THE ANARCHIST.

People's Institute Condemns Him for Saying "Kill the President."

One of the earliest questioners of the Rev. Dr. Maurice H. Harris when he closed his lecture on "A New Aspect of Patriotism," before the People's Institute in Cooper Union last night was a pale, sickly looking man.

"I am in trouble," said he, "and I naturally come to a rabbi for consolation." There was just a tinge of sarcasm in his tone. "A group of Russian revolutionists came to me the other day," he went on, "and asked me for funds with which to fight the Russian Government, which was oppressing and killing their fellow-countrymen. I gave them what I could of my means with this injunction, 'Kill the Czar.' [Laughter.]

"A few days later came to me another group of men. They were from the Congo. They also wanted money to fight against their oppressors. I gave them what I could, again saying 'Kill King Leopold of Belgium.' [Laughter.]

"Then came to me, a little later, a lot of Armenians. They wanted money to fight against the oppressions of the Sultan of Turkey. I again gave them of my means. [Laughter loud and long.]

"Next came to me a band of Filipinos. They wanted money to fight for independence. I gave them of my money again, and said 'Kill the President—President Roosevelt.'"

A storm of hisses and catcalls followed this, louder and louder. Director Charles Sprague Smith jumped up.

"Hold on! Hold on!" he thundered, holding up his hand. "Silence! Silence!"

It was difficult to quell the storm of hisses, but in the end Mr. Smith managed to make his voice heard.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "this is a question that should be answered. It should be answered by you. The gentleman asks whether he was justified—whether a man is ever justified—to give money for the purpose of slaying the ruler of any country?"

The audience had calmed down again. The director seemed to be managing the situation to please them.

"Let the man who believes that a man is ever justified in giving money to slay the ruler of a country, with the freedom of speech and opinion which exists here, arise."

The pale faced Anarchist arose for a minute to shout: "I want to explain, I want to explain! My position is that it is better for one man to die than that a whole country should suffer."

The director repeated the question. Not even the Anarchist got up.

"Now," said the director, "let those who think that a man is never justified to give money to kill a President or King stand up."

Every person in the house except the Anarchist arose.

"That, that, Sir!" said Director Smith, snapping his finger in the direction of the questioner, "that is your answer."

ENGLISH OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

Economic Changes Which May Come Under the Liberals.

EVILS OF STATE CONTROL

The Telegraph and Telephone Systems Neither Profitable Nor Efficient Under Government Management.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

LONDON, March 28.—There is no knowing what economic changes will befall this country in the course of a few years, with a radical Government in power pledged more or less to a number of semi-Socialistic measures. British conservatism looks at the prospect with grumbling resignation, but is buoyed by the hope that the Government in attempting to reform cherished institutions will wreck itself. The ultimate goal of the Socialists, State ownership of everything, may be dismissed as a chimera, but fingers are already being pointed in directions where the State may intervene and acquire great private properties.

A writer in The London Times has unearthed a clause in the Regulations of Railways act of 1844, inserted therein as an afterthought by Mr. Gladstone, by which the Government can step in and take over most of the railway mileage on serving the companies with three months' notice. The terms of acquisition laid down are twenty-five years' purchase on the average of the three preceding years' divisible profits, claims for prospective profits being referable to arbitration. In connection with the railway rate question in the United States, it may be noted that this act also provides that should the divisible profits equal or exceed 10 per cent. of the whole railway capital the rates and regulations would then be subject to revision, but while such revised rates and regulations were in force State purchase could not be effected without the assent of the companies.

But the average dividends, though once 10 per cent., are now well below that figure. In 1904, £1,266,500,000 were invested in the railways of the United Kingdom, of which £82,000,000 pay no dividend, £59,500,000 less than 2 per cent., £437,500,000 less than 3 per cent., nearly £539,000,000 between 3 and 5 per cent., nearly £137,000,000 between 5 and 6 per cent., and about £8,750,000 between 8 and 10 per cent. The average rate of interest paid on the whole capital, in spite of £86,000,000 of it yielding no return, is about 3 1-3 per cent. The purchase clause, however, is not likely ever to be acted on, as it leaves out of account the mileage built since 1844, which it does not cover, and which is a matter of 2,280 miles, (all important routes.) The provision is really unsuitable to the present railway position. The State therefore will hardly avail itself of these unworkable powers of purchase; but the fact that it possesses such powers at all is probably a surprise to many persons, and is welcomed or otherwise according to their political leanings.

State control of telegraphs has not turned out a striking success from the commercial standpoint. When the telegraphs were transferred to the Government in 1870-71, the systems in that year showed a profit of $1,710,000, but under State control heavy annual deficits have been the rule ever since. The latest returns, published this week, for the year ending March 31, 1905, show that the excess of expenditure over receipts amounts to nearly $4,610,000, and that, exclusive of this, interest for the year to the amount of $1,868,500 has been paid on the capital expended for the telegraph undertakings, which is nearly $54,500,000.

The introduction in 1885 of the sixpenny (12 cents) telegrams accounts for a big rise, since it added to the expenditure without increasing the receipts. The number of messages sent since 1903 has dwindled. On the ground of supplying superior service State control, even at a loss, may be justified as promoting the greatest good to the greatest number. But the superior efficiency of the telegraphs is not admitted, and their State control, when large annual deficits are the result, only works out for the greatest good to the least number at the expense of the greater.

Another cause for the continued shrinkage in the telegraph returns is the greater use of the telephones, which are partly owned by the Government and partly by the National Telephone Company. Here one touches upon a curious position. The trunk lines are in possession of the Government, the company's areas of exclusive service being the large towns, except in the few instances where municipalities have set up opposition exchanges. In 1911 the lines of the National Telephone Company will pass into the hands of the Government Post Office Department, so that the State will then be competing with itself in controlling both the telegraph and telephone systems.

This step will round off a condition of things under which the development of the telephone in Great Britain has almost been at a standstill. The company has been hampered and overshadowed by the Government monopoly of the trunk systems. Limited tenure and an exorbitant royalty tax have been exacted, and the companies have also been at the mercy of periodic changes of Government policy, as well as of municipal opposition to the laying down of underground wires under streets. The State, in fact, has not taken the telephone seriously, save as a mere auxiliary of the telegraph, a delusion, one may suppose, which is not now likely to last.

The United States is constantly pointed to as showing the vast field of public usefulness to which the telephone can be applied on a central battery system (which is slowly being extended here) and on the economic basis of regarding a "call" as the unit, fixing the charge on the service rendered. The practice in England is to regard the telephone itself as the unit, and an annual charge for its use is made, whether the number of calls be great or few. This "flat" system of charging subscribers is obviously defective in discouraging the small user, who is charged the same sum as the large user.

The future indicates that the neglect from which the telephone in this country has suffered will not continue. One may assume that the pending complete State control will be more advantageous to telephone development than the present awkward division of Government and private ownership, whereby the one stands in the way of the other, which meekly has to submit. On the other hand, the State, once in full possession, may stand in the way of itself, for it is known that States are open to the charge of affecting adversely the economic value of undertakings, which hitherto, when under private control, have secured a moderate success, even though hampered by legislative restrictions.

Finally, if State intervention must be, there is one direction, namely, that of the derelict canals, where the State, by taking them over, could be of real service in affording perhaps the only means by which their rehabilitation could really be effected, as private enterprise is likely to fight shy of sinking sufficient money in them to accomplish this end. As for the railways, as yet they stand in no need of State grandmothering.

FRANCE GRATEFUL TO RUSSIA.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

PARIS, April 8.—Public opinion in France is now more favorable to participation in a Russian loan than at any previous time in the last two years. The French people in general feel profound gratitude to Russia for the services she rendered in connection with the Moroccan affair.

In Paris the conviction now prevails that the Franco-Russian alliance is as vigorous as ever and susceptible of practical advantages to France. The stronger this conviction becomes the greater will be the desire on the part of the French people that a rapprochement between Russia and England be rapidly concluded.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 8.—It was positively stated to-day that a loan had been arranged in principle. The amount is to be between $200,000,000 and $350,000,000. M. Kokovzoff has gone to Paris to conclude the final negotiations.

Details of the loan are not available. It is variously reported that the loan will bear 4½ and 5 per cent. interest, the issuing price being 9 or 92, with 1½ per cent. commission.

Why Gov. Sleptzoff Was Killed.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 8.—M. Sleptzoff, Governor of Tver, was assassinated in circumstances almost similar to those in which Minister of the Interior de Plehve was killed. Sleptzoff organized the massacres at Yaroslav last November, and, being transferred to Tver, did nothing to prevent the burning of the Zemstvo building there, by which many employes were roasted alive.

NO HUNGARIAN SURRENDER.

Apponyi Says the Coalition's Programme Has Not Been Abandoned.

VIENNA, April 8.—Count Albert Apponyi, the Minister of Worship in the new Hungarian Cabinet, said to-day:

"The Hungarian Cabinet was formed on the basis of universal suffrage and all other questions will be reserved for a Parliament elected on this basis. No part of the coalition programme has been abandoned."

The members of the new Cabinet were sworn in at Hofburg Palace this afternoon. Afterward the Emperor-King held an informal reception, in the course of which his greetings of the new Ministers were most friendly.

From the Hofburg Palace the Ministers went to the Hungarian Ministry, where they held their first Cabinet council. It was decided that writs would be issued to-morrow calling for elections to be held April 28. The new Parliament will, it is expected, assemble on May 19.

FOOTPRINTS LED TO ARREST.

Prof. Jacobi's House Robbed—"Gentleman of Leisure," Arrested.

Prof. Abraham Jacobi of Columbia University, who lives at 19 East Forty-seventh Street, thought he heard footsteps in his house about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, and, reaching to the wall beside his bed, he touched a button and turned on the electric lights. After listening for a moment he concluded that he had made a mistake and went to sleep again.

About 8 o'clock when he got up he found his front doors unlocked and a pane of glass gone from the kitchen door in the rear to give entrance to a burglar. Prof. Jacobi found that he had lost about $300 worth of jewelry and silverware, but that the burglar had overlooked $900 in cash in a drawer in the library.

The police found footprints which led over to the back fence and then into the yard of the house immediately in the rear, which is 18 East Forty-eighth Street. After measuring the footprints they decided that their length was that of shoes worn by Frank Moffat of 18 West Forty-eighth Street. They arrested him. When asked his occupation Moffat said:

"I am a gentleman of leisure. I don't have to work."

Moffat sent a message to Mrs. Elizabeth Devereaux, caretaker of the house on Forty-eighth Street, which said: "Please notify Margie." The police want to find Margie.

TIED UP SUPPOSED THIEF.

Elevator Man Accused of Stealing Reached the Police Like a Bale.

Like a bundle of hay, John R. Peach, an elevator man employed in the building 565 Broadway, was handed over to Policemen Sullivan and Curran of the Macdougal Street Station late on Saturday night. His legs and arms were so securely tied when the policemen, answering calls from a window, got him that about the only thing which he could move was his tongue. He moved that, saying:

"For heaven's sake, take me out of this!"

August Heck, a partner of Joseph Rashover, a hat merchant on the fourth floor of the Broadway Building, and an employe named Frank Barekwiski got Peach and tied him. Expensive hats had been disappearing from the store at night recently, so on Saturday night Heck and Barekwiski, armed with shotguns, hid in the store for the thief. Late at night they heard the elevator ascending and Peach, the elevator man, enter. After he had picked out one or two of the most expensive hats Heck stepped out from behind a lot of boxes and told Peach to hold up his hands.

When they had tied him up securely the two watchers called in the police. Peach was held in $1,000 bail for trial in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday. He said he had felt very much relieved when the two policemen arrived.

SEEK JEWISH UNITY.

Delegates of State Societies Also Protest Against Russian Cruelties.

More than 200 delegates of Jewish organizations of the State met in the rooms of the Young Men's Benevolent Association, 311 East Broadway, yesterday afternoon. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the cruelties to which the Jews have been subjected in Russia, stating the objects of the organization to be:

"To establish close relations among all Jewish organizations of New York, for the purpose of enabling them to work in unison in all matters pertaining to their welfare."

Another clause of the resolutions read: "To establish close relations with similar organizations in the various States of the United States for the betterment of the Jews in this country, as well as for our brethren in foreign countries."

Ex-Judge Otto H. Rosalsky, Civil Justice Leon Sanders, Judge Hoffman, Nissem Behar of Jerusalem, and others spoke.

DESERTER WAS AT BELLEVUE.

Secret Service Men Found Army Man Working for the Hospital.

Robert Kilfer, for whom the Secret Service agents have been looking for several months, and who is wanted in Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to answer a charge of desertion from the army, was captured yesterday afternoon. Kilfer was employed as a messenger in Bellevue Hospital, and was quietly attending to his duties there when a couple of Secret Service men found him.

When the detectives started to handcuff the deserter there was a lively scuffle. Kilfer is in Castle Williams now. In a few days he will be started back to Fort Leavenworth.

TWO YEARS REQUIRED TO FINISH HILL'S ROAD

Five Hundred Miles of Transcontinental Line Completed.

WIDE NETWORK OF FEEDERS

Extensions Into the Mining and Agricultural Sections of British Columbia and Manitoba.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 8.—The completion of James J. Hill's Canadian transcontinental line will require two years, according to an official close to Mr. Hill, who talked of the enterprise to-day. Considerable mileage is already under construction.

Mr. Hill plans the construction of a line from Vancouver, B. C., to Winnipeg, Manitoba. Part of the route has been decided upon, but as yet the course through the Territories of Alberta and Assiniboia is a matter for determination. Several surveying parties are now in the field, and are skirmishing in more than one section of Canada.

Active construction work is progressing at several points. The Great Northern has now about 500 miles of line under construction, and the plans call for approximately 1,800 miles. Between 3,000 and 4,000 men are at work building lines now. As soon as the weather gets more favorable, additional thousands will be put to work.

The biggest stretch of line on which construction is now under way is from Vancouver over the coast range easterly to Princeton. The route follows along the south bank of the Fraser River and inclining northerly it strikes just north of the Tulameen River. The line will cross near where the Pasayton and Similkameen Rivers come together in a fork at Princeton. The line proceeds along the Similkameen Valley on through the copper district. After crossing the Okanegan River the route swerves in a northerly direction to Midway, B. C.

From Midway the Great Northern has a line built to Nelson, Grand Fork and Marcus being among the important points along it, while going down to Spokane and Bonner's Ferry connection is made with a line that runs from Bonner's Ferry north to Kuskonook. The Great Northern already extends to the coalfields at Fernie.

From Fernie the line will strike across to Winnipeg. Surveyors are now in the field to see what route can be taken. The distance from Fernie to Winnipeg is approximately 900 miles. On the Canadian Pacific the distance from Winnipeg to Vancouver is 1,566 miles.

Another link in the transcontinental line which soon will be under construction is a line from Winnipeg to Brandon. The distance is approximately 130 miles. The building of this line has been definitely decided on, and work on it will be started soon.

Throughout the new line branch feeders are being extended, which will give immediate traffic, and these extensions into the agricultural and mining regions to the north and south will be continued until the line across the continent is completed.

The plans for the east and west line are well mapped out, and an exciting rail-laying contest will start soon among the Great Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern.

Construction is now in progress on two Great Northern lines from the United States into Manitoba. These north and south lines will not only act as feeders to the east and west Canadian line, but also will furnish coal and lumber for Canadian points from the American side.

The Great Northern is now building a line from St. John's, N. D., to Brandon, Manitoba. The crews are just over the border. The rails are already on the ground, and it is expected to have them all laid some time in August. The distance is seventy miles. A line is also being built from Neche, N. D., to Portage La Prairie, Manitoba. The rails for the line are on the way. The connection is eighty-five miles in length. The Great Northern is also considering a line from Emerson, just above the international boundary line in Manitoba, to Winnipeg. At present the Great Northern is operating its freight and passenger trains over the Canadian Northern tracks between Emerson and Winnipeg.

The building of the Great Northern from Hibbig, Minn., to Winnipeg, 150 miles distant, and which will be completed by January next, will afford an outlet for the new Canadian line at the head of Lake Superior long before the eastern part of this line is completed from Winnipeg to Montreal. Already traffic to and from the Canadian Northwest is going by way of the lake route through Minnesota and North Dakota, but the Hibbig-Winnipeg cut-off will shorten the distance to the Far Northwest several hundred miles.

The plans for the Hill system east of Winnipeg practically mean paralleling the Canadian Pacific, striking the Rainy Lake country and Lake Superior at Port Arthur and following the Canadian Pacific to Montreal and Boston, with several Atlantic Coast branches.

It is understood that the new road will be a continuation of the Great Northern system, and that no new organization will be formed. Unlike the present Canadian lines Mr. Hill does not ask a dollar in bonus or an acre of land grant.

The invasion of Mr. Hill's lines have connected the Hill enterprises with others in Canada. There is every ground to believe that these reports are all in error, as the lines under construction and under contemplation are largely in Canadian territory as well as in Canadian Pacific territory. The new lines will enter a competitive field, which is taken as sufficient proof that there is no joint action among the railroads.

MET THE DEATH HE FEARED.

Man Quit Railroading, but a Train Killed Him Anyway.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 8.—Samuel Schlitt, 40 years old, a mechanic of this city, was run over and killed at the East Main Street crossing of the Erie Railroad to-night. He attempted to board a passenger train as it was leaving the station, and was thrown under the wheels.

Schlitt had been employed on the Ontario & Western Railroad. After several accidents in which he narrowly escaped with his life he quit railroading, saying he feared he would be killed by a train some day.

"AUNT JANE" MUST MOVE FROM BARGE OFFICE GATE

She Has Had a Little Stand There Many Years.

TREASURY SAYS IT'S TO GO

She Has Seen Millions of Immigrants Pour Through the Gates—She May Write to the President.

"Aunt" Jane Noonan, for thirty-eight years a vender of apples, oranges, peanuts, and jelly cake at the point where immigrants enter, will not be at the old stand to-day. Secretary of the Treasury Shaw has ordered her to move away, and the old woman, who has met more immigrants than any other person in the United States, was told to take down her sign or else get a place away from Government property to sell her dainties.

It is forty years since Aunt Jane landed in New York. She came over in the steerage of an ocean sidewheeler, and, being an intelligent girl, had little trouble in getting a job in what is now the Aquarium, but which at that time was known to all nations as Castle Garden.

For two years Jane Noonan worked in grim old Castle Garden. Then one day she quit. She was going into the fruit and peanut business, she told the Commissioner. Everybody knew her, and among her friends were many who stood high in the favor of the Government, so that she readily obtained permission from the Treasury Department at Washington to place a stand in front of Castle Garden.

As long as Castle Garden was the landing place for immigrants Jane Noonan continued her business, and when at last the bureau was transferred to the other side of Battery Park into what is now the Barge Office she took her stand and planted it alongside the big iron gate through which the immigrants pour into New York. Two days ago Jane Noonan heard that she must move away.

"Aunt" Jane could not believe her ears. She told her troubles to "Dick" Ganley, the veteran policeman and dog fancier; to "Big Tom" Foley, the Tammany leader, and her old friend Supreme Court Justice Fitzgerald. These men have long taken a kindly interest in "Aunt" Jane, and when they found out that the Government had taken her place of business they went to work, and are now trying to get Secretary Shaw to change his mind. Late last night, so far as is known, the Secretary had not revoked the order.

"I just simply can't understand it," said "Aunt" Jane yesterday. "What on earth do they want with my poor little business? It won't be Battery Park without me, will it? 'Big Tom' Foley and good Judge Fitzgerald are standing by me, and who knows but I may win out after all? I may write to Mr. Roosevelt myself. He is a big-hearted fellow, even if he ain't Irish, and if he knew how I had brought up all my babies and grandchildren so that they would be good citizens I believe he would take a hand and tell his Treasury man to leave me alone."

"Aunt" Jane, it is said, has seen ten million immigrants come into the United States. They came from the four corners of the world, and those that had pennies to spend patronized her stand. To the little children she was ever willing to give freely of her stock, and thousands remember the old woman whose smile was the first to welcome them when they landed in New York.

6,000 SUPPORT VOLIVA AS DOWIE'S SUCCESSOR

Meeting at Zion City Indorses Denunciation of First Apostle.

DOWIE MAKES AN ADDRESS

Tells San Antonio Followers He Will Fight to the End and They Support Him.

ZION CITY, Ill., April 8.—With the approval of thousands of Dowieites in open meeting at Shiloh Tabernacle to-day, General Overseer Wilbur Glenn Voliva denounced John Alexander Dowie as a spendthrift and traitor. After his denunciation Overseer Voliva demanded a decision of the audience as to who should be their future leader. The 6,000 persons in the auditorium rose as one person and signified their willingness to follow Voliva.

On the platform with Voliva were Mrs. John Alexander Dowie, Judge Barnes, head of the Law Department of Zion City, and Overseers Speicher, Excell, Cantel, and Granger.

At the conclusion of a short prayer by Overseer Speicher, the new leader of Zion, clad in a robe of simple white and black, a decided contrast to the gaudy raiment assumed by Dowie on similar occasions, made the announcement that he would "tell a few truths" about the deposed leader.

Voliva then told the audience of the "deplorable" conditions he found at Zion City when he arrived a month ago from Australia and took up the management of Zion's interests at Dowie's command. He spoke bluntly of the "perfidy of John Alexander."

No one showed more approval of Voliva's remarks that Overseer Mrs. Jane Dowie. When Voliva angrily exclaimed: "I will see that all the costly furniture and expensive library adorning Dowie's Zion City residence, which were purchased while many of his people were in need of food, are sold and the money turned into Zion's storehouses!" Mrs. Dowie half rose and with voice and hands loudly applauded the words.

Voliva declared that in Australia he had been compelled to keep himself and family on $50 a month allowed him by Dowie, and that out of this monthly salary he had been compelled to turn over a tenth in tithes to the Church. At the same time he had been sending the storehouse at Zion City $1,700 every month, and that other Deacons had done fully as well as he had for the Church.

He asked what had become of all the money that had been flowing into Zion for so many years. In reply he said that the greater portion of these funds had been squandered recklessly by Dowie, a great deal having been used by Zion's former leader for his own personal comfort and a few of his favorites.

"If you want to stand for shameful misuse of money, keep your seats; but all of those present who are tired of his lying, his exaggerations, his misrepresentations, his inconsistencies, his hypocrisy, and his gross ignorance of all business laws and principles, stand up as an evidence of their denouncement of Dowie and his methods."

The response to this request was instantaneous, every one in the building rising in acknowledgment of Voliva's leadership.

Voliva then declared that if Dowie on his arrival in Zion City on Tuesday thought to frighten him into submission, Dowie never was more mistaken in his life. He requested all present to keep away from the railway station next Tuesday when Dowie reaches Zion City.

"I don't want you to go down there and listen to his egotistical harangue," said Voliva. "If he should try any of his spectacular antics on his arrival here, we will soon put a stop to them. He cannot hold a meeting in Shiloh Tabernacle, because we won't let him. Should he succeed in securing a house in which to hold a meeting I want you all to remain at home."

Voliva requested the people to give their assent to this arrangement by rising. The response was unanimous compliance.

After the meeting the 250 Zion guards employed to keep order in the city were sworn in to support Voliva in all his undertakings. All except one took the oath of allegiance.

A message was received from Dowie this afternoon stating that he would reach Zion City Tuesday morning and ordering Shiloh House, his residence in Zion City, to be prepared for his homecoming. Voliva vowed that Dowie would not be allowed to enter the door of his former home.

LONDON, April 8.—The Zionist Church here to-day confirmed the deposition of John Alexander Dowie.

DOWIE BERATES HIS WIFE.

He Speaks at San Antonio and Finds Warm Supporters.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, April 8.—John Alexander Dowie and his party left to-night for Chicago. The train was delayed at San Antonio, and advantage was taken of this fact by the local Zionists, who arranged for a meeting at which Dr. Dowie was to speak. Every seat in the local temple was filled fully an hour before Dowie was to make his appearance.

When Dowie entered the hall the audience arose and sang a hymn of praise. Dowie walked down the centre aisle, bowing and uttering "God be with thee." For ten minutes Dowie and the audience prayed together to banish the devil from Zion.

Then Dowie talked. His address was centred upon the subject of polygamy and the conduct of his wife. The audience was with him in all that he said, even when he bitterly disparaged Mrs. Dowie.

After he had been speaking about twenty minutes, Mrs. Emma Rapp and her husband arose and faced the apostle.

"Have you anything to say, Sister?" asked Dowie.

"I lived in your house for a number of years," said the woman, "and I want to tell these people here that never was there a kinder husband or a better Christian gentleman. I want to say, also, that when your every act was one of kindness and consideration to Mrs. Dowie she made life insufferable for you by her insane jealousy and fiendish perversity. I often wondered how you could be so kind under the conditions that existed. I make this statement of my own free will because God has told me to speak."

Dowie then declared that so long as breath remained in his body he would fight for the rehabilitation of Zion.

"I have not long to live," he concluded, "but I pray that God may spare me just long enough to win this fight. Then I will be willing to go to that long sleep, knowing that I shall be eased to the last by the 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant,' which will be uttered by all of my people, for they will have seen the light and learned that John Alexander, First Apostle, was chosen by God to give the word to Zion."

After the benediction, the audience filed past Dowie and shook his hand, each reiterating an assurance of loyalty. When Dowie returned to his hotel a correspondent showed him the following telegram from Chicago:

"At Zion City to-day everybody was for Voliva."

Dowie seemed somewhat shocked at the message, but declared that it would be unwise for him to make any comments on it at the present time.

NEW YORK DOWIEITES MEET.

Overseer Mason Denounces Old Leader, but Women Object.

John Alexander Dowie, First Apostle and self-styled Elijah III., General Overseer of the Church in Zion, was attacked and censured for alleged lack of truth by one of his followers, George E. Mason, Overseer of the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion, at 11 West 116th Street, yesterday afternoon before a good-sized audience.

The attack on Dowie was not universally acquiesced in, however, because several members of the congregation left the edifice, and at the conclusion of the discourse, which lasted for nearly two hours, several women expressed themselves as against the stand taken by Mr. Mason. One stout old woman shook her fist at the retreating form of the Overseer, and shouted:

"I am for Dr. Dowie, and that is the devil's own preaching."

POLYGAMISTS DROPPED AS MORMON APOSTLES

Protest of Senator Smoot Heeded by Leaders of Church.

HIS CHANCES HURT BY THEM

Senate Committee Wondered Why They Would Not Testify and Asked About Their Status.

Special to The New York Times.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, April 8.—Evidently with the intention of proving to the United States Senate that the Mormon Church has abandoned polygamy, two polygamist members of the Twelve Apostles, the ruling body of the Mormon Church, were dropped from the list when it was presented for approval at the annual conference in the Tabernacle to-day. They are John W. Taylor and Matthias F. Cowley. Taylor is a son of John Taylor, who succeeded Brigham Young as President of the Church, and was one of the most powerful apostles.

It is understood that United States Senator Smoot is responsible for the humiliation of his two fellow-apostles. One of the strongest arguments made against him in the contest to deprive him of his seat in the Senate has been the apparent condonation by the Church leaders and himself of recent polygamous marriages by the two men.

The Senate committee which has been investigating the whole Mormon question growing out of the election of Apostle Smoot to the Senate has been anxious to hear from Taylor and Cowley, as well as Apostle George Teasdale. All three are charged with having married into polygamy since the issuance of the Mormon manifesto of 1891, in which the leaders of the Church gave a distinct pledge that polygamy should be abandoned.

There has been plenty of evidence before the committee that men who married into polygamy before the manifesto have kept up their family relations since then. Joseph F. Smith, the President of the Church, is one of these. But the opponents of Smoot and the committee have paid little attention to this phase of the matter. Their chief desire has been to learn whether the old polygamous teachings were still being obeyed in the Church, despite the manifesto and the pledge in the Constitution of Utah that there should be no polygamy in the State.

It is admitted that Taylor has violated the manifesto. This apostle was a middle-aged man with three wives. One day he married two sisters, who had scarcely attained their majority, and took them to Canada with him, leaving his other wives in Utah. Cowley also is said to have taken more than one wife, and similar charges are made against Teasdale.

Subpoenas were issued for these men by the Senate committee when it took up the case of Smoot. Immediately they left the country. Taylor and Cowley went to Alberta, Canada, where the Mormons have a large settlement, and, it is understood, that Teasdale went to the Morman settlements in Mexico. Senator Smoot has been asked several times before the committee why these men were not ordered to come forward and tell their story, and it was made evident to him that his case was seriously prejudiced by their actions.

It is said here that Smoot has insisted for two years that something should be done to show the good faith of the church. President Smith is understood to have written to Taylor and Cowley, ordering them to go to Washington and appear before the Senate committee. It is said that they declared they would rather resign their high places than to be put under the ordeal, and so their resignations were accepted. The talk of resignation, however, is taken with some allowance here, as it is not often that Mormon apostles give up without a contest. It is believed the other apostles tried them in secret and deposed them.

Three new apostles were appointd to-day and confirmed by the people at the conference. They are Orson F. Whitney, George F. Richards, and David O. McKay. It is said that all three are monogamists. Whitney once had two wives. His first wife died, and immediately he legally married the other.

A DECISION ON SPARRING.

Principals Not Guilty Unless They Know an Admission Fee Is Charged.

Four principals and two referees were arrested the other night at a "sparring exhibition," so called, at the Marlborough Athletic Club in West Forty-fourth Street. Magistrate Wahle in the West Side Court yesterday gave this decision:

"Prize fights are prohibited; a sparring exhibition is not prohibited, save where an admission fee is charged, and before a defendant can be held for a violation of the statute it must be established that he engaged with another in a sparring exhibition, that an admission fee was directly or indirectly charged, and that the defendant knew, or had reason to know, that an admission fee was being directly or indirectly charged."

After the prisoners had been discharged their lawyer said:

"This decision means that the sparring exhibitions can be held by organized clubs."

Approach of Racing Season Arouses Lively Interest.

GOOD MOVES AT GRAVESEND

Sheepshead's Regular Track Again Open for Work—Brown Stable In from Kentucky.

The liveliest Sunday of the Spring training season on the more accessible Long Island racetracks yesterday evidenced the fact that in just one week the New York turf year will open. At both Sheepshead Bay and Gravesend crowds of visitors attested the public interest in the renewal of racing on the metropolitan courses. The professional element was better represented than on any Sunday of the Spring, one group of racing men at Gravesend comprising P. J. Dwyer, Newton Bennington, T. Keator, Frank Farrell, Otto Townsend, and D. C. Johnson, while trainers and owners from all parts of the country, who have been gathering for the past three weeks, were on hand.

The tracks were fast and in good condition, though the greater part of the training work for the day was done at Gravesend. There the most notable move of the morning was made by the smart filly Whimsical, which went the distance of the Carter Handicap, seven furlongs, and, with something in reserve all the way, she galloped out her trial in 0:12, 0:24½, 0:36¾, 0:49¾, 1:02¾, 1:16⅘, and finished in 1:31⅕. She worked with the two-year-old Sandy Creeker, which went only a half mile of the distance with her.

Other well-known horses that worked at Gravesend included the Carter Handicap horse and stable mate of Roseben, Jacquin, three furlongs in 0:36¼; Keator, in the same stable, three furlongs in 0:37½; the gray colt Oxford, a quarter in 0:26¾; Graziallo, a half mile breezing in 0:57; Black Prince, three-quarters of a mile in 1:18¼, and the stout and swift handicap mare Dainty, an easy canter of a half mile in 0:57.

At Sheepshead Bay the regular race track, which in the Winter was plowed up and resurfaced with a new top soil, was in condition for horses to work over for the first time this Spring. James H. McCormick sent out Emergency for five furlongs handily in 1:03; Monet, six furlongs in 1:17; Grenade, a mile in 1:44½, and Glorifier, a half mile in 0:53½. John Lowe sent Luretta a half mile in 0:49½. Albert Simons worked Monterey three furlongs in 0:39, and Frank Brown worked Oliver Cromwell a half mile in 0:55. The latest important arrival at the Sheepshead Bay track is the stable raced in the name of W. H. Brown for the estate of Capt. S. S. Brown, containing twenty-five head and trained by Robert Tucker. The Brown horses got in from Lexington, Ky., Saturday night. The best horses of the stable are Agile, nominated for the big Spring handicaps; Accountant, Sue Smith, and the highly bred and highly tried three-year-old King Henry. Eighteen two-year-olds are in the establishment.

FAST SPEEDWAY BRUSHES.

Amateur Horsemen Enjoy Good Sport—Big Crowd in Attendance.

There was a big turnout of the light-harness brigade on the Speedway yesterday, and a good day's sport was enjoyed by several thousand persons. Many of last year's performers showed excellent form, while there was a large delegation of new horses. The Speedway was in fine condition, and the warm weather enabled the horsemen to enjoy the sport to the full. For the first time in four months real brushes were witnessed, many of which were close. Mrs. Henry J. Flaherty of Jamaica attracted much attention during the morning. She drove Wiltona, 2:19½, several fast half miles. An attempt was made to engage her in a brush, but she declined the challenge.

Edward J. La Place drove his pacers Don Riley and Cascade, two of last year's cracks. With the latter he beat Towanda, which was driven by a trainer. He kept Don Riley well in front of several others in short brushes. Charles Weiland was behind the pacer Sir Albert S., formerly in the stable of C. K. G. Billings. La Place, with Don Riley, challenged Weiland, but the defi was declined. S. T. De Lee's chestnut pacer Leo T. won a lively brush from J. F. Cockerill's trotter, Annie Little. The former Speedway champion, Claus Bohling's Kingmond, was in good shape, and defeated Annie Little handily.

One of the best brushes of the morning was between George H. Huber's pacer Harry Van, Harry Richmond's green pacer George W., and Gracie Plandit, driven by Rue H. Clark. The three horses kept well together until they reached the half-mile post, when Gracie Plandit and George W. broke, and Harry Van finished alone. Joseph F. Gibbons again paraded his green trotter, which developed remarkable speed, and more than held its own with John Wegman's trotter, Miss James. It was one of the fastest brushes of the day. Andrew Crawford's Effie Shannon and L. N. Boynton's trotter, Dada Bell, broke even on two good brushes. S. D. De Lee, with Leo T., was kept busy racing. He won and lost against E. O. Benson's Estrella, driven by the owner, but went down to defeat to G. H. Huber's Harry Van, after beating Annie Little.

Charles S. Rice showed a couple of fast half miles with his pacer, May Hathaway. W. J. Clark, Secretary of the Road Drivers' Association, drove a green pacer to a runabout. Dr. H. D. Gill held the reins over his pacer, Sue Dix, and made matters lively for the pacing brigade. W. J. Hiscox's team of pacers, Quick and Fannie J., created a favorable impression by their speed and appearance. Among the other horsemen on the driveway were:

SOCIETY AIDS TENNIS.

Newport Cottagers Subscribe to Send American Team Abroad.

With the knowledge that filtered through the ranks of lawn tennis players last week that the American team of challengers was about to be named for the International Cup matches a new impetus was shown in the way subscriptions were made to the fund with which to defray the expenses of the players abroad. The sum total of $1,105, which Frederick G. Anderson, the Chairman of the committee in charge of the American team, had on hand was swelled by the receipt of $675. The largest single subscription of this amount was from the Treasurer of the Casino, Newport, R. I., George R. Fearing, of $250. This was made by the Governors of the Casino from the funds. The Governors include Col. John Jacob Astor, J. C. Gray, G. R. Fearing, Egerton L. Winthrop, H. McK. Twombly, William R. Travers, Lorillard Spencer, S. F. Barger, Perry Belmont, W. Watts Sherman, James G. Bennett, James Stillman, H. A. C. Taylor, G. Peabody Wetmore, G. L. Rives, and Nathaniel Thayer. It was said that the Casino, upon the courts of which the National championship has been held for many years, was ready to make an addition to this original subscription if necessary.

From the plans which Chairman Anderson arranged yesterday the four players of the team—Beals C. Wright, Holcombe Ward, Kreigh Collins, and Raymond D. Little, will begin practice a week from to-day on the courts of the Belmont Cricket Club, Philadelphia. On April 23 the players will come to this city, and from that time to May 18, the date of sailing for England, they will practice on the turf of the Crescent Athletic Club, Bay Ridge, and the Orange Lawn Tennis Club.

Vanderbilt Horses Won at Longchamps.

PARIS, April 8.—At Longchamps to-day William K. Vanderbilt's Torbury won the Biangy Stakes, a selling event at ten furlongs, and his Maintenon the Hocquart Stakes, for three-year-olds, at one and a half miles.

SPORTING EVENTS.

BASEBALL, Polo Grounds to-day 3 P. M. Giants, Champions of the World, vs. Providence. Ad. 50c.

CROWD HOOTS THE GIANTS.

Would Not Play Until Umpire Was Removed—Beat Providence Easily.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 8.—The world's champions, the New York team, won from Providence, the Eastern League champions, to-day, rolling up 15 runs to the local team's 2 in the first game of the season at Rocky Point. The principal feature of the contest was the "kicking" of the visitors, for they began to protest decisions from the moment that the first ball was pitched. Nothing that Umpire Cotter did seemed to meet with the approval of McGraw's men, and the result was that the big crowd of 6,200 persons present hooted and jeered the world beaters throughout.

In the first inning McGraw called his men to the bench, refusing to abide by a ground rule that had been agreed upon. No sooner had the Giants withdrawn from the diamond than they were surrounded by an angry mob, and for a time matters looked serious. Trouble was averted when the visitors returned to the field. Umpire Cotter was removed and a player from each team was substituted. This action was taken by President "Pat" Powers so that the big crowd would not be disappointed. The score:

MANAGER GRIFFITH PUZZLED.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 8.—This was an ideal Southern Spring day and the members of the Greater New York baseball team took advantage of it to take long walks over the good roads about Atlanta. The final game between the visitors and the locals will take place to-morrow. With the season almost toppling over on the Americans, Manager Griffith has two positions still undecided—third base and left field—with two candidates for third and three for left.

The New Yorkers are a trifle puzzled about the third base situation, for if you take one man out the other looks just about as good, and if you leave the other chap in he looks too good to take out. Griffith is likely to play Laporte at third, with Moriarity as a utility man. In the outfield Conroy will be in centre field, Keeler in right, while Hahn, Delehanty, and Dougherty are fighting for left, with Delehanty handicapped by reason of his late hour of reporting.

PHILADELPHIA, 5; NEWARK, 3.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 8.—By bunching their hits in the third inning, and by clever fielding, the Philadelphia Athletics, champions of the American League, defeated the Newark Eastern League team in the first exhibition game of the season at Weidenmayer's Park to-day. Newark scored in the first inning when Mahling came home on Foster's two-base hit. Oldring tied the score in the second on Bronkie's bad judgment. In the third inning Hoffman got first on balls, Riggs went out from second to first, Brouthers reached first on balls, and Davis sent a two-bagger to left field, scoring Hoffman. Seybold made a two-base hit to the left field "bleacheries," scoring Davis. Oldring struck out. Knight hit a two-bagger to centre field, bringing in Seybold, and Byrnes went out from third to first. Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Declarations from the Excelsior Handicap, due Saturday, still are to be announced, but from the statements of trainers, the more prominent horses that will be stricken out include about the same as the Carter Handicap declarations, with Sysonby and Delhi included. The Excelsior is to be run April 27.

The weights for the Southern Steeplechase Handicap, the closing cross-country feature of the Washington meeting, have been announced as follows: Gamecock 168, Knight of Elway 158, Pelucida 153, Red White and Blue 149, My Grace 144, Ironheart 142, Loney Haskell 135, Harry Patton 135, and Olerosa 135.

Hermis, pronounced a hopeless cripple a year ago by the majority of trainers who knew his condition, is surprising horsemen by the progress he is making in his training at the Jamaica track, and a number of close observers who have watched his development this Spring now regard him as a sure starter for the Carter Handicap, the event for which he has been taking a special preparation. Hermis worked in harness through the Winter, and went into Spring training in firm flesh and good condition, and up to date his ailing leg has made every promise of holding good.

AUTOISTS ARE ANXIOUS ABOUT VANDERBILT CUP

Racing Board May Change Conditions of Contest To-day.

BIG ENTRY LIST EXPECTED

Alterations to be Made in the Course—Chairman Thompson Wants Rules Enforced.

Automobilists who are interested in the plans for the Vanderbilt cup race are anxiously awaiting the action of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association, which will hold its first meeting this afternoon in the rooms of the Automobile Club of America. That changes in conditions may be made is practically assured, and it is known that William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., outlined their nature to the Directors of the A. A. A. last week. But, apart from any change in conditions, what the manufacturers and others who may enter cars are most anxious to know is when the time for entries will close and how the eliminating race will be conducted.

In respect to the latter, it is believed that the Racing Board will make a definite statement as to its probable attitude in selecting the first five cars to represent America in the international contest. In view of the absurd methods adopted by the committee a year ago in picking the team, a more common sense policy is looked for this year, and if Chairman Thompson's views on the subject bear any weight such will be the case.

While no statement has yet been made as to the closing of entries, the time, it is believed, will be no earlier than May 15, the limit last year, and the date may be extended to May 30. Mr. Thompson said last week that he had already received many inquiries from American manufacturers asking for information.

"There is greater interest than ever in the big race among Americans," said Mr. Thompson, "and I would not be surprised to see at least fifteen American cars entered for the elimination trial. Many of them, I hear, are well advanced toward completion. Besides good entries from Italy, France, and Germany, I expect to see England in the race."

Mr. Thompson, who has not missed the biggest automobile races abroad for several years, will sail for Europe early in June to attend the French Grand Prix event, which takes the place of the Gordon-Bennett cup contest. The race will last two days, and will be held June 26 and 27. Some powerful French cars have been built for the event, and the best of them will be seen later on the Long Island course for the Vanderbilt cup.

The Darracq cars that caused so much trouble for their failure to be equipped with differentials will be supplied with them this year. No effort, therefore, will be made to revise the racing rules of the American Automobile Association in respect to the differential, which is now absolutely required. Notwithstanding this rule, the Darracq winner of the Vanderbilt Cup, and also the big Darracq that carried off the leading records at the Winter's meet at Ormond, Fla., had no differential. The protest that has been lodged against the Darracq for this noncompliance with the rules by the competing Napier car of England will revive the discussion on the Racing Board's duties at the meeting to-day.

News of the Oarsmen.

Oarsmen were out in force on the Harlem River yesterday, and representatives of nearly every club took a spin in the morning or afternoon. The first real preliminary work for the Decoration Day regatta was taken. During the early morning hours the wind was brisk and chilly, but toward noon it warmed up, and the oarsmen discarded their sweaters, which were very acceptable earlier in the day. Doubles played an important part in yesterday's work. Titus and O'Neill of the Nonpareil Rowing Club, Fuessel and Bradley of the Harlem Rowing Club, and Steinkamp and Bachus of the Nonpareils attracted attention. These three doubles, with Shepheard and McLaughlin of the Seawanhaka Boat Club, will make some interesting races this season.

The Nonpareil Rowing Club, in addition to the two first doubles, sent out an eight with Steinkamp as stroke. The Harlem Rowing Club had an octuple sculls crew on the water and a four. Capt. Nagle expects a lively season this year, and is making preparations to put out a junior eight next Sunday if the weather is fine. The Nassau Boat Club made an excellent showing with over a score of men, split up into doubles, fours, and an eight. J. Curley of the Nonpareils stroked the junior eight. Capt. Cornell of the Union Boat Club kept a junior octuple crew busy. George Hassell, an Australian, is the latest acquisition to the Unions.

The New York Athletic Club was well represented yesterday at Travers Island. Among the Mercury Foot oarsmen who indulged in practice were C. P. Stewart, Durando Miller, Richard Mann, and Charles Quinn. Miller is working to become a senior this year. Stewart and Quinn were out in a double, while Coach Giannini had fully twenty-five youngsters out trying for the junior eight.

H. Hart and S. Hartenstein, in a junior double shell, and a junior four gig left the Wyanoke clubhouse. The Crescents were represented by a single, double, and intermediate eight. The Metropolitans showed unusual activity. An octuple shell, several barges, a junior four, and double, and two junior singles were hard at work.

Among the oarsmen noticed on the river were W. Mehrhoff, M. Hayward, N. Nichols, Capt. Stivers, and two Stattig brothers, J. Culley, Capt. Cornell, E. Groden, Harold Thompson, H. Hertel, E. Sulger, J. Kirk, E. Putnam, Frank Veseley, Frank Wants, J. Callahan, John Schultz, T. Hassell, Julius Bradley, C. S. Titus, and C. P. Stewart.

The first intercollegiate crew race of the season was rowed at Annapolis on Saturday. The next will be held on Saturday, April 28, when the midshipmen row again, this time against the Pennsylvania crew. On May 6 Yale will send a second crew to Annapolis to meet the navy's second best. On May 12 the Columbia freshmen will go to Lake Whitney, where they will row against the Yale youngsters, and on May 9 the Columbia 'Varsity will go to Annapolis. From then on the races will be more numerous. Harvard rows Cornell at Cambridge on May 25, and on the following day the American Rowing Association Regatta at Philadelphia will attract several college crews. With the exception of the Yale-Harvard race at New London on June 28 the season closes at Poughkeepsie on June 23.

BILLIARD CHAMPIONSHIP.

Interest Centres in Hoppe's Showing Against the Veterans.

Six of the foremost professional billiardists of this country and a skillful French exponent of the game will begin to-night a tournament for the world's championship. Overshadowing all else in this meeting at the 18-inch balk line method, two counts in balk, will be the interest that centres upon a young American, William F. Hoppe, already a world's champion at the most difficult game upon the table, 18-inch balk line, one count in balk. It will be his handling of the willow cue and his working out of the carroms with the ivory balls that will be eagerly watched as the tournament in the concert hall of Madison Square Garden progresses. Actually it is Hoppe's debut in a really big event and in the company of such resourceful and masterly wielders of the cue as Jacob Schaefer, once the holder of the title that the youthful Hoppe won from Vignaux and defended against Slosson; George F. Slosson, Louis Cure, the French entrant; George Sutton, Ora Morningstar, and Albert G. Cutler. It is also Cutler's first experience in such company.

Practice such as Hoppe has been doing during the past week, with averages up to 53 and runs of 164 and 146, only indicate perfection of stroke and the ability possessed under unfavorable conditions. Schaefer has also achieved some remarkable results in Philadelphia, where he has been preparing for the contests, while Slosson and Cure likewise have rolled the globes so gently and deftly that results of a dazzling nature have been their portion. But it is seldom that figures such as these are attained by any competitor in a big tournament.

During the last 18-inch, two shots in balk, tournament at the Madison Square Garden, playing against Albert Garnier, March 31, 1896, Frank C. Ives made a high run of 200, and finished his 600-point match against Garnier with an average of 50.

The winner will be sure of a money prize of $4,300, at least. The net gate receipts will be added by a new agreement.

To add interest to the tournament and assure a lively contest at the finish, the losers in each series will be put forward and the winners held back for the final struggle for championship honors. This system may necessitate the matter of scheduling the losers for successive afternoons early in the week.

The schedule of opening games is as follows: To-night—Louis Cure of Paris vs. Ora Morningstar of New York. Tuesday afternoon—George Sutton of Chicago vs. A. G. Cutler of Boston. Tuesday evening—George F. Slosson of New York vs. the loser on Monday evening.

Sutton Played Good Billiards.

George Sutton, who will compete in the world's championship 18.2 balk-line billiard tournament at Madison Square Concert Hall this week, wound up his practice games at the Broadway Billiard Academy last night. During the past ten days Sutton has done splendid cue work, making several big averages and high runs. Yesterday afternoon he defeated W. Gershel by the score of 400 to 174. While his best run was only 72, he showed steady, consistent work, and averaged 22 4-18. Gershel averaged 9 13-18, with high runs of 56, 41, and 18. In the evening Sutton won from C. Aborn by the score of 400 to 155. His average was 19½, and high runs 84, 62, and 52. Aborn averaged 7 15-20, and made three runs of over 20.

BOCK PANETELA

Actual size. Price, 15 cents each.

Five Million Sold Annually in United States

Is smoked by almost every man who smokes imported Havana cigars. It is very mild and satisfies more people than any other imported Havana cigar, as it can be smoked immediately after breakfast when one's taste is most exacting or at any other time when a heavier cigar is not desired. Straight shape—smokes freely and pleasantly.

Every Cigar Store Sells This Cigar.

SPECIAL NOTICE—The long-continued heavy rains during last December and January destroyed more than half of this year's tobacco crop in Cuba. This will not, however, affect the high quality of Bock Panetelas, as the Havana Tobacco Company holds a sufficient supply of fine, ripe, perfectly matured tobaccos to continue its output of Bock Panetelas for two years.

THE HAVANA TOBACCO COMPANY EXPORTS MORE HAVANA CIGARS FROM CUBA THAN ALL OTHER MANUFACTURERS COMBINED

Masterpieces of Piano Building

We do not know of a piano (and we are acquainted with almost every piano that is manufactured) at double the price you are offering these pianos for that will equal them in tone, durability, beauty of design and workmanship. It is an opportunity rarely heard of where one can become the possessor of the highest grade piano at ONE-HALF ITS WORTH, on such liberal terms as you offer.

AN INTERESTING SITUATION.

The Washington dispatch we printed yesterday morning, and the dispatch from St. Petersburg, together with reports from other sources, indicate an interesting situation in connection with The Hague Conference and the meeting of the representatives of the American republics at Rio Janeiro.

One of the subjects of prime importance which the latter will discuss is the Calvo doctrine as to the collection of contractual indebtedness by the use of military force. It is a matter of intense interest to our neighbor republics on the south and to our own Government, to the former because such collection of private debts has been in the past and may be in the future a pretext for forcible occupation, possibly intended to be permanent, of territory on this side of the Atlantic by European Powers, and to our own Government because such forcible occupation has been resisted by us in the past—successfully—and assuredly will be resisted in the future. It is of serious consequence that situations thus pregnant with extreme risk shall be prevented if it be possible to prevent them. In order to prevent them it would be exceedingly desirable that the doctrine referred to should, in proper form and with such definition as can be agreed on, be accepted by the chief Powers in interest, including the signatories of The Hague Convention.

The reports as to the opposition of Germany to such a plan are not unnatural, whether they be correct or not. It is the misfortune of the habitual attitude of the German Government that it is somewhat spectacular and not always consistent, and lends itself to surmises of a somewhat sensational character. Where, however, permanent and extensive interests are involved, are fairly and temperately presented, and are sustained by considerable political and military prestige—as was the case at Algeciras—the outcome need not be despaired of. Moderation and firmness in just demands go a long way in modern times, and in this matter Germany may expect precisely this, nothing more, and certainly nothing less.

AN UNEXPECTED OUTBREAK.

Within the last few days there has been a quite unexpected outbreak of tariff discussion in the House of Representatives and in the press of the country. Some features of it are especially interesting. There was the demand of the New England Republicans for a hearing on revision before the Committee of Ways and Means; there was the usual rebuff by Chairman PAYNE; there was the letter of Speaker CANNON to the Ohio pottery men announcing rather brusquely that revision must come in the near future; there was the telling speech of Mr. RAINEY, the sole Democratic Representative from Illinois, on the exactions of the watch manufacturers from home consumers, as compared with foreign consumers; finally, there was the surprising speech of Mr. PERKINS of Rochester, Republican, disclosing in a peculiarly dispassionate tone the burden imposed on the country by the smelting combination through the aid of the tariff tax on lead. Here we have several important elements in a popular agitation—the demand by a portion of the party in power for revision, the stolid refusal of the machine, the prompt attack of the opposition party; supported and emphasized by a second and different portion of the dominant party.

No one can say what this portends. We have had like agitation of the abuses and excesses of the tariff before, and nothing has come of it. We have also had agitation begun much in this manner that has led to a decisive popular movement and to a change in the House, followed by a change in the White House. We are not inclined to exaggerate the tendency of public opinion to turn toward tariff revision, for that tendency has been shown before, and has "petered out." We are, nevertheless, convinced that the injury to the country from the mistaken policy of excessive protection is sufficient and is sufficiently definite to induce political action if the public mind really turns toward it, and that may happen at any time. The American people are prone to deal with only one thing at a time. When other things engross their attention they will not heed the tariff, but if the tariff should be the one thing uppermost in their minds at the time an election was pending, it is important enough and clear enough to incite them to conclusive action.

The present movement hinges on three general facts: First, that our manufactures are hampered by a needless tax on materials; second, that American buyers are paying a good deal more for protected goods than foreign buyers; third, that the profits of these oppressive conditions go to practical monopolies. See what this means. It means that the manufacturers themselves, the natural supporters because the beneficiaries of the tariff, are divided; it means that numbers of the people are becoming convinced that foreigners are really favored by the tariff and not Americans, and it means that the present intense and logical antimosity toward the monopolies is being directed toward monopolies buttressed, if not created, by the protective tariff. These are facts wholly in conflict with the patriotic pretensions of the protectionists. The American people will stand a good deal for what they believe to be patriotic; they are liable to kick like Texas steers at patriotism discovered to be but a cloak for selfish greed.

THE INTRINSIC SITUATION.

The disappearance of the bank surplus makes it timely to recall to mind some of the more permanent conditions which are reassuring, and which do not alter so easily as the money market and bank reserves. It is not meant that the situation in the money market is unimportant or manipulative. Quite the contrary.

A few months ago when Mr. HILL was sure that the country, except the Great Northern Railway, was in a bad way he moaned that the country could not sell its products. There is no sort of difficulty about that just now in either the foreign or domestic trade. The foreign trade statistics for February show an increase in every item of both exports and imports, imports of food and animals alone excepted. The increase of exports is in round numbers thirty-five millions of dollars, or just about thirty-five times the increase in imports. It is difficult to say which is more satisfactory, the increase in exports of agricultural products by $23,000,000, or in manufactures by $7,000,000. It will be remembered that some wiseacres thought a little while ago that we had seen our best days of exports of agricultural stuff, but figures are now running at the best upon record. Our exports of manufactures are of course checked by our home consumptive demand. A worse interpretation might be placed upon a larger export, if we were dumping abroad because we could not afford to use at home.

The test of domestic distribution is found in railway earnings. The smallest increase of gross earnings for any week this year, as compiled by The Wall Street Journal, is 5.72 per cent., and so exceptionally favorable have been the year's conditions of transportation that a gross increase of 20.54 per cent. in January produced 44.29 per cent. increase in net and in February 68 per cent. For eight months the increase in net exceeds $45,000,000. There is no precedent for such figures. What experienced railway men expect of the future is indicated by two facts. There are contracts for 13,014 miles of new road, and the New York Central chooses under these conditions to announce a stock issue of $100,000,000. These preparations for a larger future trade would not be made if those so deeply interested in them detected reaction. Nor is there any sign of retrogression in the dividend record. For April the distribution exceeds $64,000,000, and is probably a maximum for the month.

These are facts, not prophecies. What the future may bring forth each man must judge for himself. There are those who think that the very excellence of the existing conditions prevents their continuance. There is such congestion of prosperity that there is not money in the country adequate to sustain the volume of business or the outstanding bank credits. Some think that we have been spending more than we have saved, and that the excess expenditure has been bank money, resulting in fixation of liquid capital, and requiring a slower pace. To those who think thus some retardation in bank clearings will be reassuring as signifying a slowing down and an interval for recuperation. Other prudent observers have [illegible]ed some slackness in the iron trade. [illegible]is is subject to the same interpretation, or it may be true that it is only a repetition of a similar condition which lasted but for a brief period last year. But last year there was no prospective coal strike and a Congressional campaign was not impending. And last year the conditions of confidence were under whatever degree of less strain is implied in a year's shorter agitation of the insurance question.

These sentimental factors will perhaps be dominated by the crops. If they are good they will both strengthen the intrinsic situation and also increase the strain upon our monetary resources, already unpleasantly overworked. If the crops are bad there will be money enough and to spare, and there will be something else for the despondent to emphasize. Dealing with facts and not with fears, it can be said of conditions in the financial as in the insurance world that substantial soundness is modified by cautionary factors enough to inspire the prudent to wariness. That we should improve upon present conditions is hardly to be expected or even to be desired. That there should be some moderation is a consummation devoutly to be wished, for it is better that the steam should be exhausted than that there should be an explosion. If this should result in our going on almost as well as at present that is about the best thing which could happen.

TUSKEGEE.

The Tuskegee Institute has given a sufficient account of itself on its twenty-fifth anniversary, which was held last week. All the money and labor and confidence that have been intrusted to BOOKER T. WASHINGTON have been amply justified in the eyes of the public spirited, North and South, who have given them. The demonstration that was provided on this occasion not only by the school itself and those who represented it, but also by the Southern men who are best able to appreciate its results, has been impressive. Started twenty-five years ago by a young negro with an annual State appropriation of $2,000, the Institute has grown into a world-famous institution, and its chief into one of the distinguished figures of his time. Tuskegee and BOOKER WASHINGTON have been described and discussed in the fullest measure in recent years; but the demonstration that was given of them both, their power and influence, the success of the work they are doing, made this quarter-centennial a profoundly impressive occasion both to those familiar with them and also to those whose knowledge rested on hearsay.

There are few institutions and few occasions that could have brought so many distinguished men and women so far to observe and to testify by their presence and their words to the importance of Tuskegee in the solution of problems besetting this country. But more significant than the coming of the Northern visitors were the presence and the words of the distinguished Southern educators and leaders of the intellectual and religious development of the South. It was their declared belief that the Tuskegee idea of negro self-help, of the transformation of an ignorant and helpless race into a race of trained artisans capable of a free and independent economic development, would be the chief contribution to the end that all so ardently desire. They and the negro authorities and graduates of Tuskegee united in the declaration of the friendliness of the dominant race toward the work of the institution itself and of its graduates who have gone elsewhere to continue it. There may be dissatisfaction in the South at the prominence and power to which Tuskegee and Mr. WASHINGTON have attained; but it is not among the advanced and enlightened men and women who are destined increasingly to mold the public opinion of that section.

One of the remarkable facts that this celebration has brought into prominence has been that a great institution has been built up and developed and great material resources have been administered successfully by negroes. Through it have been exhibited the great qualities of one negro, at least, and the intelligence, devotion, and self-control of many others who have tenaciously kept to a high ideal. They have a right to congratulate themselves, in Mr. WASHINGTON'S words, that they have "put a new spirit into the people, a spirit that makes them feel that they have friends right about them, a spirit that has filled them with the idea that they can make progress, that they will make progress and fulfill their mission in this Republic." The negro then will "seek gradually to build himself into a glory of his own, rather than seek to be a weak imitation of others."

A MISCARRIAGE OF PROSECUTION.

The first criminal case under the Elkins anti-rebate law has ended in Philadelphia in the confusion of the prosecution. It took the jury only twenty minutes to acquit the accused under a charge from the court all in their favor. The Government had prosecuted an agent instead of a principal, and it followed that the money paid to the defendants was not received by them. The Government, moreover, had alleged a rebate where there was no rate, which was absurd. Where the law does not require a rate to be published there can be no crime by rebating, and that was the case proved.

We do not see how there can be dissent from the conclusion that the case was not fit to be brought. It was a breakdown of the prosecution, not of the law. As an example of poor administration of the existing law the case is more useful than as a proof of the need of more law. The sending of one rebater to jail would wonderfully strengthen confidence in the administration of the anti-rebate laws upon the statute book, and incidentally would also demonstrate the lack of necessity for more laws. It was the servant who was faithful with one talent who received larger responsibilities, but neither President ROOSEVELT nor his Inter-State Commerce Commission nor any of the departments or bureaus have shown any such success as to warrant enlarging their duties. To wait years before bringing the first rebate case, and then to bring a ridiculous case, does not discredit the law so much as it does its administrators. Mr. FOLK and Mr. HADLEY are not finding fault with the law or asking for more laws. The contrast with some others may suggest something.

POSTAL PROGRESS.

"I have asked for the consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter," said Postmaster General CORTELYOU soon after the submission of his annual report, "with the present third-class rate of 1 cent for two ounces for books, boots and shoes, dry goods, and other merchandise." He continued:

> This can be done without reorganizing the service. All parcels of merchandise not exceeding four pounds in weight can be carried as usual in ordinary pouches and sacks at one-half the rate now charged, which will be sufficient to reimburse the Government for the actual cost of carriage and afford great convenience to thousands of people at multitudes of places that are not now reached by the express companies.

There is little doubt of the favorable public sentiment for the passage of a bill effecting this reform. It is, after all, merely a resumption of postal rates in force in 1874. Yet when officers of the Postal Progress League attempted last week to gain a hearing before the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for a bill embodying the bare proposition of Mr. CORTELYOU they met a rebuff from its Chairman, Congressman OVERSTREET. Perhaps the postal reformers were a little overzealous—reformers sometimes are—in advocacy of a measure whose worth, coolly measured, is its sufficient recommendation. We think Mr. OVERSTREET may yet be persuaded to reconsider candidly his adverse decision.

The appropriation of $2,000,000 by the Board of Estimate for the Henry Hudson Memorial Bridge at Spuyten Duyvil, following the favorable report of the Mayor's committee, insures the prosecution of that important work. There should now be no question of its completion in time for the celebration of 1909. It is to be borne in mind that the bridge is by no means purely a monument, but a work of public utility the need for which would in any case presently become urgent, if it be not urgent already. It is further to be noted that to insure and enhance the effect of the bridge a reservation should be made of the wooded heights at the Manhattan end of it. Such a reservation can now be made much more cheaply and effectually than if it were left until the region was spoiled for public purposes by private improvements, for which, indeed, a great part of it is by its topography unavailable.

The bill to wipe out the Mayor's non-partisan Water Commission, selected from the lists submitted by the Chamber of Commerce, the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, and the Manufacturers' Association, and to substitute a political Board has been favorably reported by the Assembly committee. What body of grafters, we may pertinently inquire, desires a "whack" at the $161,000,000 to become available when the Catskill proposition is perfected? And, by the way, of what further use to the city are the services of that thoroughly partisan body, the Aqueduct Commission? Why not pass a bill abolishing it?

Four fundamental questions concerning the Panama Canal are scheduled for settlement by Congress at this session. They relate to the type of the canal, whether sea-level or lock; the method of construction, whether by the Government or by contract; the government of the Canal Zone, and the reorganization of the Isthmian Canal Commission. These, if we mistake not, were questions to have been finally decided last year, and the year previous. New expenditures have been decided upon and made with unflinching enthusiasm throughout that period.

Our correspondence from London gives some interesting facts as to the cost of the Government operation of telegraphs in the United Kingdom which the advocates of public ownership and operation of public utilities would do well to study. Taken over in 1870-71, when they were paying to the owners a profit of $1,710,000 a year, the telegraphs cost the Government, that is to say the taxpayers, last year $4,610,000 excess of expenditure over receipts, besides $1,358,500 in interest on the purchase money, a net loss of $5,968,500. The service is much complained of, but if it were excellent it is plain that those enjoying it are doing so at the expense of those who do not use it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A Doctor on Football. Rarely indeed has football received a defense as thoroughgoing and enthusiastic as it got in an article contributed to The Medical Record of April 7 by Dr. WILLIAM LEE HOWARD of Baltimore. And it is unreformed football, too, with all its roughness and all its dangers to life and limb, that he lauds, both as excellent in itself and an alternative for the physical and moral flabbiness he finds among boys and young men deprived of strenuous sports. "A boy with a broken leg from football," declares the doctor, "has a far brighter outlook for future success in life than the coddled son of a mother who will not look physiological facts in the face and learn that physical expression of activity is the only healthy channel for the expenditure of youthful energy, and if prevented this energy will be wasted along the line of immorality which will leave scars and wounds that last throughout a miserable existence." Thanks to training for and interest in athletics, the college student of to-day, according to Dr. HOWARD, is better as well as stronger than the undergraduate of twenty years ago. "A boy to be a man," he says, "must have the physical fighting instinct. If his school and college days are properly directed, this instinct will be diverted to football, wrestling, or boxing, and rightly but roughly directed. We want no pietetic odor around boys' games, nor any atmosphere of timidity; but strong, virile, rough, dangerous, if you will, contests that make against moral and physical degeneration." And Dr. HOWARD insists that the benefits of his favorite game are not confined to players. Physical advantages are claimed by him for the fathers and sisters—he does not speak of mothers—who watch the contests, and he explicitly declares that "it is in the student spectators that the healthful influence is mostly seen"—which is, of course, the exact opposite of the usual contentions and calculated to make even football enthusiasts catch their breaths. But Dr. HOWARD figures out very prettily that "the howling, yelling horde of adolescents, their dancing and singing, grotesque costumes and ridiculous rhymes, and the apparently mad leaders, are not signs of reversion to our savage ancestors, but an expression of normal physical energy." His conclusion is: "Eliminate any of the risks in the game, suppress any of the powerful animal instincts which the game must bring out, throw a mantle of pedantic authority over the rules, and you will bring about an atmosphere of timidity and effeminacy which will rob football of all its direct benefit to our youths and young men."

A Novelty in Strikes. When hotel waiters draw the line at clergymen, refuse to serve them unless granted an advance in wages, and strike because the advance is refused, things have indeed come to an alarming pass! To add horror to this portentous phenomenon, its scene was Brooklyn, the City of Churches, where waiters might have been expected to be resigned, if not to be delighted, when called upon to serve the clergy. But no; not only did the waiters in the hotel where three hundred delegates to the New York East Conference of the Methodist Church purposed to take luncheon incontinently ask for extra pay when they heard whom they were to stay without flagons, and vehemently go on strike when they got it not, but a second gang or covey or school, or whatever may be the collective term for waiters, did the same thing soon after it had been hastily gathered. When questioned the strikers declared that for the clergy, as such, they had a high respect, but as givers of tips the clergy were nought, or next to it, and they simply couldn't afford to spend time and exert strength when there was almost literally nothing in it. One may safely assume, we suppose, that the waiters spoke from experience and that there were few tips or none to be expected from these guests. Several questions therefore arise, all more or less important. Do the clergy, as a class, not only believe that tip-giving is an evil practice—as do many members of the laity—but do they, as a class, possess the enormous amount of moral courage that is required for refusing an expected and "earned" tip? Again, if they have this resolute firmness, is it because there is truth in the old theory that clergymen share to a large degree the peculiarities as well as the virtues of women, and have something of the feminine disregard for a scene? It is known that women not only dislike to give tips, but that they can endure with a composure unknown to men the waiter's scorn or reproach when the tip is withheld or is smaller than custom dictates. The Brooklyn episode supplies no answers to these questions, and it must probably remain a dark enigma.

Two Kinds of Evidence. Devised, as it was, for application to a single case, the bill substituting life imprisonment for the death penalty when conviction of murder is based on circumstantial evidence, met a deserved fate when it was defeated in the Massachusetts Senate last week. The question of capital punishment is an important one, and it ought to be settled in accordance with public sentiment, which seems to be, or to be becoming, adverse, but such a settlement as this would have been could not have lasted, since it would have been equally unsatisfactory to the opponents of legal killings and to those who still believe in them. Murders vary in atrocity, and varying punishments might reasonably enough be assigned to the different kinds, but a discrimination based upon a mostly imaginary and mistaken idea as to the relative weight of circumstantial and direct evidence would come nearly to the limit of absurdity. The common view that circumstantial evidence is always dubious, and the testimony of eyewitnesses always more trustworthy is very far from correct. With neither, perhaps, is absolute, abstract certainty to be attained, but it can be approximated with the one as well as with the other, and with both the degree of certainty that suffices for all the operations of human life is well within reach. The object of the Massachusetts bill was to save the life of CHARLES L. TUCKER, convicted of murdering MABEL PAGE. That may or may not be a desirable end, but the method of attaining it was inept and its employment would have tended to confirm a popular misapprehension that has many unfortunate effects. Circumstantial evidence is good, bad, or indifferent, but so is the other kind of evidence, and, if circumstances can be misinterpreted, witnesses can conceal the truth and tell untruth, sometimes intentionally and sometimes because their eyes have deceived them. In the last analysis all evidence is circumstantial, and that is the final argument against such legislation as that proposed in Massachusetts.

Vesta Victoria Does Like America.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some one, without any authorization from me, makes the statement that "Vesta Victoria does not like America," going on to say I could not be induced to return here. On the contrary, I always look forward with keen pleasure to being able to renew my engagements on this side of the water. I would be ungrateful indeed were it otherwise, for nowhere, not even in "dear, dirty Dublin," where the public receives me with open arms and warm hearts, have I ever been shown more genuine kindness or gained more widespread applause.

ROTATION IN THE COURTS.

Even More Necessary in the Lower Than in the Higher Tribunals.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The system of rotation by the Justices of our Municipal Courts, now sought to be abolished by Senator Cooper's bill, (Senate Bill No. 164,) is of vital importance to the residents of the east side, and the East Side Civic Club has for that reason taken a deep interest in this question.

The "rotation" law was enacted by the Legislature as a direct result of the evils disclosed in the impeachment proceedings against Justice Bolte.

Few persons realize the importance of establishing a high standard of judicial ethics in the Municipal Courts, even higher than in the Supreme Court. Frequented as they are by the poor, the ignorant, and the helpless, the parties are absolutely at the mercy of the Presiding Justice. In "landlord-and-tenant" cases his power is supreme! He can dispossess a tenant at once or he can block an important real estate transaction by allowing an obstinate and unreasonable tenant to remain a few days longer and prevent the new owner from taking possession or making alterations in the building.

In the great majority of cases tried in these courts the Justice has the last word. Only a few litigants can afford to take an appeal. The record in the Bolte case shows that from Jan. 1, 1900, to July 1, 1903, 17,847 judgments were rendered in the Second District Court and only 320 appeals were taken. Persons whose claims do not exceed $500 are compelled to bring their cases in these courts. In addition the right to appeal has been made to depend on the financial ability of the appellant.

On an appeal from a Court of Record a bond for the payment of the judgment and costs is deemed sufficient. But when appealing from the Municipal Court, "the poor man's court," as it has been called, enough money in cash must be deposited with the Clerk of the Court to cover the costs of the judgment appealed from. In addition, there are fees to be paid to the different clerks, stenographers, &c.

I venture to say that one-third of the persons who have meritorious appeals from judgments of the Municipal Court are unable to appeal because payment of the costs in advance is required by law.

If, therefore, the people are forced to go to the Municipal Court and the right to appeal is made difficult, if not discouraged, it is only fair to expect that the Judges should be free to decide the cases honestly and conscientiously without fear of displeasing the powers that be, and that they canot do sitting in one court all the time.

The rotation system takes the Judges away from the districts where they vote and reside one month out of every six. The people that come before them in different courts are total strangers, and they are thus able to do even-handed justice. Not being able to help their political leaders they seldom run danger of dissatisfying them. Trying cases in various parts of the city every month, they are never called upon to decide questions of fact between their friends or acquaintances.

The rotation system as it is at present tends for progress, fair dealing, and honest and fearless administration of justice, and should be supported by all good citizens of New York City.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

How Trouble Arises with the Native Civil Authorities.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May a few words be said in reply to your recent editorial comments on missionary work in China? Unfortunately, it must be frankly admitted that the existing difficulties and disturbances have been caused to a large extent by the unwarranted interference of certain missionaries with the course and administration of Chinese law. But this disastrous policy is confined to the emissaries of one particular Church, whose officers have assumed the rank of high native officials, are addressed in the corresponding grandiloquent terms of native etiquette, and travel in state. They protect their converts to such an extent from the operation of Chinese law as practically to remove them from the jurisdiction of the native Magistrates.

The writer well remembers an incident which occurred shortly after his arrival in China. A native deacon of the church to which he belonged had become surety to the extent of $60 for a young brother apprenticed to a jewelry firm. The apprentice robbed his employers and decamped. The elder brother was requested to pay the amount of his bond, but was unable to do so. Consequently he was arrested and put in prison. Our church members implored the clergyman in charge of the station not to allow this to continue; it would cause us to "lose face"; this other church would never suffer one of its prominent members to be so humiliated, &c. The clergyman was firm and refused to interfere.

A few days later we heard that the deacon was being very cruelly treated, mainly because he was a Christian, so it was determined to pay the money and secure his release. I went with the clergyman to the Magistrate's yamen or court to see the transaction through. We were kept waiting an unconscionable time, and when the Magistrate at last appeared he observed none of the usages of Chinese politeness, but angrily burst out with the questions:

"Are there no laws in your land of America? Why do you come here interfering with our customs and laws?"

My friend quietly assured him we were not a lawless people, and that we had no desire whatever to interfere with the proper exercise of his official functions; on the contrary, we had come to pay the money for which the surety had made himself liable, and lawfully obtain his release. Immediately his manner changed and he became quite affable, apologizing for mistaking us for the missionaries of another Church, and deploring the troubles constantly arising over their converts. We said farewell on the best of terms, the Magistrate exhorting us to "let our footsteps linger."

Incidents which have not ended so happily are within the writer's knowledge, but they need not be mentioned here. He writes simply to protest against the indiscriminate blame of all missionaries for a policy which is followed only by one particular Church.

AMERICAN FAMILY LIFE.

The Relative Privileges and Responsibilities of Husband and Wife.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read the interesting disquisition on "American Home Life" by "Jax." That the remedy lies largely with the American wife and mother is mainly true, but the real difficulty is with the times—the drift of things in the present day life.

Let a tide of sentiment once set the other way and we shall find just as much faithfulness on the part of the American wife and mother as there was when Bowling Green was the centre of society.

Now, isn't the good-natured complacence of the American husband that "Jax" touches upon as a world-wide joke just a bit tinged with a motive of selfishness—the idea of enjoyment of home comforts undisturbed, of cozy suppers, roof-garden parties, &c., without accountability, while the "old lady" and the "kids" are luxuriating in the mountains or at the seashore? Does anybody suppose that the wife and mother would "desert" her spouse quite so contentedly if she realized the hollowness of the proposition that absence makes the heart grow fonder?

Let us give our women credit for possession of a fair degree of innocence, and let us show them that we want to be with them. Hypocrisy breeds hypocrisy, and something of a "show-down" on each side will do neither side harm; in fact that is the only way to repair the dislocation of the times. Who has the courage to start the treatment?

New York, April 5, 1906. J. W. E.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the heading of "Jax's" letter regarding the change in family life you ask, "Whose is the fault?" The fault is Jax's, of course. Why didn't he choose for a wife a woman of his grandmother's type? He has his grandfather's mind, and so to preserve harmony in the family he should have married one of his grandmother's friends.

There is no need to be alarmed. These men who make mistakes in the choice of a wife, and then rail at the whole sex because of their disappointment and lack of judgment, are most unjust. Pure descendants of Adam, they try to excuse themselves by saying, "The woman tempted me and I fell."

As for "men keeping their nose to the grindstone" of business during the Summer months while their wives are having such lovely times in the country taking care of the children, I have worked in offices for several years, and haven't been deeply impressed with the presence of the "grindstone." A big, easy chair, feet on the desk, chats with friends, cigar in mouth, is not the very worst "grindstone" in the world.

A husband and wife ought to separate from each other occasionally. It is good for them both. Then when they come together again they appreciate each other all the more for the absence, and life together takes on a newness of spirit. All real students of human nature know this to be so.

This Rabbit a Terror to Cats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have a Maltese rabbit brought up by a member of the family. He was born in the yard and got accustomed to take his milk from a doll's nursing bottle.

We also have three cats. About a month and a half ago bunny began to chase the cats. It drives them from one corner of the house or yard to another, until they take refuge on a table, on a chair, or on a fence. The cats do not dare to stir from their place of refuge. Bunny will sit for two, three, or even four hours waiting for them to move.

This seems to me a strange anomaly in natural history, something I have never heard of before. The rabbit has the cats completely terrorized. The Maltese cat in particular dares not to come down from the fence in the yard. It will stay there all night if some one does not bring it into the house.

When Gold Boils.

From The London Globe.

Prof. Henri Moissan has been trying some interesting experiments in vaporizing gold in the electric furnace. He finds that it boils at 2,400 degrees centigrade, and that 100 to 150 grains can be evaporated in two or three minutes. By condensing the gold vapor on a cool surface, either filiform masses or cubical crystals can be obtained. It is found that gold, like copper and iron, dissolves a certain amount of carbon when in the liquid state, but this separates out as graphite on cooling. Gold is found to be less volatile than copper. The properties of distilled gold are the same as those of hammered gold, or the melted metal reduced to a fine powder. Prof. Moissan has found no indications of an allotropic modification of gold. When an alloy of copper and gold is distilled the vapor of copper comes over first, showing that there is no definite compound. In the case of alloys of gold and tin the latter metal burns in contact with the air. This tin oxide is found to be of a purple color due to a deposit of fine gold on its surface.

And all for a nominal fare;

Patrician, sans feathers and fuss.
Away, then, from Madison Square
On top of the Avenue 'bus.

Below us the coaches will glide,
The humble pedestrians stare;
The drivers will rudely collide,

Great magnates galore will be there,
Careering along, below—us!
Enthroned, like a crowned royal pair,
On top of the Avenue 'bus.

A pleasure you never have tried?
My dear, 'tis a privilege rare—
A progress triumphal, allied
To jauntiness most debonair.
Come, come! For the climb now prepare—
No, Phyllis, your dress you won't muss.
Unsafe? Tumble off? I declare!
On top of the Avenue 'bus.

Up, Phyllis! For shame! You don't dare!
Just climb—do not stop to discuss.
Up, up!—one, two, three!—and—you're there!
On top of the Avenue 'bus.

SUPT. SHEARER COMPARES NEW YORK AND ELIZABETH

He Finds the School System of His Own City Better.

PUPILS LOSE FAR LESS TIME

Fifth Paper of the Series Points Out How Time Might Be Saved and More Progress Made.

In the previous papers I have called attention to some conditions which cannot be satisfactory to the friends of the New York schools. So far as was possible in brief space, I have also endeavored to show how these unfortunate conditions can easily be changed for the better. In the present paper, at the risk of seeming egotism, I wish to compare results obtained and methods used in Elizabeth with those in New York, that by their fruits they may be judged.

In comparing these two cities, it should be remembered that, because of unusually unfortunate financial conditions, Elizabeth is able to expend less than one-half as much per pupil as do New York and other surrounding towns and cities. Whatever results are secured, therefore, must be won in spite of a terrible handicap, and New York should do far better than Elizabeth. However, the records of both cities will bear out the following statements:

(1) In New York 50 per cent. of the pupils below the high school get no further than the third grade. In this connection it should be remembered that, if the same number of pupils entered the schools each year and all continued regularly, which is an impossibility, there would be found in each of the eight grades below the high school 12 per cent. of the pupils. Therefore, in the first three grades there should be but 36 per cent. of the pupils in place of 52 per cent. In Elizabeth 37 per cent. are found in the lowest three years. Therefore, if New York did only as well as Elizabeth, 93,000 more children would be above the third year.

90,000 More Should Have Progressed.

(2) In the same way it may be shown that over 90,000 more children should have finished the primary grades than did so if New York did only as well as did Elizabeth.

(3) It may also be shown that at least 72,000 more children should have finished the sixth year grade.

(4) Two hundred and fifty per cent. more pupils should be found in the high school of New York City to equal the record being made in Elizabeth. This statement is based upon an editorial in The Philadelphia Ledger of Jan. 2, 1906. The editorial shows that because of a feasible plan of classification, Elizabeth leads New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, Baltimore, Cleveland, Buffalo, Washington, Jersey City, St. Paul, Scranton, Albany, N. Y., and Springfield, Mass., and other cities.

(5) Authorities prove that in New York at least 250,000 pupils have lost from one to seven years. Because of certain conditions there must be some loss of time. However, the records in Elizabeth show that with a flexible plan not more than 40,000 would need to have lost time, and that those losing would not average a loss of more than one-third of the time lost by pupils in New York. In place of losing a million years or more, the loss would not be more than one-twelfth as great. This alone would mean a saving of $40,000,000 to New York City. In addition to this, the pupils' productive lives would be increased, better training would be given, and the school lives of many thousands be lengthened. Any one of the last-mentioned benefits would be of far greater advantage than the mere saving of time.

Few Pupils Gain Time.

(6) Very few, if any, of the pupils in the New York schools gain time by extra promotions. How many do cannot be determined, as the reports contain no statement concerning the matter. Records prove that, under a flexible plan, not less than 300,000 would gain considerable time. Part of the gain would be the result of allowing the brighter pupils to go on more rapidly; part of it would be that which is lost by constant, unnecessary repetition of work thoroughly understood by the majority. This would mean an enormous saving to the city and a great increase in the amount of education which many thousands would receive.

(7) In New York the 565,000 pupils enrolled are bound in chain gangs and compelled to move at the same rate. Under a flexible plan every pupil will be perfectly free to advance at the rate which seems best for him. No pupil in Elizabeth need be kept one day in a class where the work is not suited to his capacity and advancement.

(8) Every teacher in New York is expected to hold back the bright and drive forward the slow. Under a more pliant plan of organization no teacher is expected to take any pupil over the work faster than he can do the essential work thoroughly, broadly, and well. This would be of great benefit to every one of the 565,000 children and to every one of the 12,000 teachers, for it would mean their educational emancipation. The bright would not be held back. The slow would not be hurried. The progress of those in the middle of the class would not be interfered with by those at both ends. Each teacher could devote her time and energy to becoming a teacher in the truest sense of the word.

300,000 Must Lose Half a Year.

(9) In New York, because of the iron-clad grading, 300,000 are annually told they must lose six months though but a short distance behind their classmates. Under a more sensible plan most of these pupils would lose no time, and those losing time would lose only so much as they were really behind in their work. For example, a pupil absent one month in Elizabeth loses one month, not six months.

(10) Under a proper plan pupils are thorough in essential work passed over. Teachers are not expected to force any class to cover more ground than the class should. Teachers will testify that the New York pupils are not as thorough in the essential subjects as they should be. Yet we wonder why pupils go to school so long and know so little.

(11) Under the usual plan there is but little time given for preparation of lessons in school, where most of the lessons should be prepared, in place of requiring the parents to do the teaching. With the more flexible plan followed in Elizabeth pupils have half of their time in school for the preparation of lessons under the direction of the teachers, whose duty it is to do the teaching, as well as the testing.

Less Chance for Mischief.

(12) Under the usual plan suitable work cannot be assigned to all pupils; therefore there results much idleness and the necessity of much punishment; for the idle brain is still the devil's work-shop. Under a more rational plan, pupils are kept busy on suitable work and discipline is far easier.

(13) In New York all teachers have some pupils not fitted for the work. Under the plan used in Elizabeth, no teacher is required to retain in any class pupils not capable of obtaining benefit from the work suited to the class. The report for last December shows that in Elizabeth there were not more than two pupils per thousand whom the teachers thought should be placed elsewhere. Why then should teachers in New York be compelled to keep from ten to twenty-five times that many where it is not best for them to remain?

(14) Instead of almost entirely losing sight of the individual, a proper plan demands attention to the peculiar needs and conditions of each. Under the plan in New York the teacher is forced to forget that the class is composed of fifty individuals, and to think only of the fact that all must be at a certain place by the time fixed; therefore she dare not think of the needs of the individual pupils. Under fear of condemnation, she tries to stuff all with the same amount of indigestible matter, in the hope that they will appear big enough to pass the senseless examination for promotion. Fortunately, the Almighty has provided the children with good forgetters, and that which would be mental burden and would result in great injury is soon forgotten, though the time wasted is never recovered.

A Comparison of Methods.

Having re-stated some of the advantages which result from the adoption of a more flexible plan of organisation it may be well to again briefly compare methods which give such entirely different results.

(1) Under a better plan of organization, in place of basing the promotion of pupils, even in part, on a promotion examination, it is determined by the teachers' careful estimate of the pupils' ability to do advanced work.

(2) Under a proper plan pupils are promoted to advanced work when they are ready for it, instead of being promoted at a time arbitrarily fixed. Yearly half the pupils in Elizabeth take a step in advance of their classmates. Why should not 250,000 children in New York City do the same, instead of wasting time waiting on others?

(3) Under a rational plan teachers are not compelled to drive pupils over the work faster than they can do the work well. The teachers are not required to furnish the necessary brain cells to enable pupils to keep up with their more gifted companions.

(4) In place of herding pupils together in large classes they are accurately classified into smaller divisions.

(5) In place of having but sixteen divisions six months apart, into which all pupils below the high school must fit, a proper plan provides from forty to sixty divisions but a short distance apart.

Attention to Each Pupil.

(6) Under a proper plan, in place of neglecting the individual attention to each is required. In the essential branches pupils work in small classes, and also work as individuals at these points where experience has shown there is greatest need of individual work. Thus the teacher comes into close contact with each pupil, than which nothing is more important. For proper mental development there must be this contact of the mind of the teacher with the mind of the pupil; the separate study of its needs and the separate ministering to the needs which are peculiar to it. Only thus can the strong mind of the true teacher come into life-giving contact with the weaker mind of the pupil for the purpose of restraint, guidance, and development.

(7) In New York pupils are moved forward by companies, and no record of their ability, acquirements, or mental, moral, or physical peculiarities is sent with them. Before the new teacher learns these, many of the pupils become discouraged because they are not understood, and, for this reason, quit school or get but little benefit therefrom. Under a proper plan such a record is sent with the pupil that, after a minute's study, the new teacher has the benefit of all that previous teachers have been able to learn of the pupil. The record shows not only what the pupils are worth in each branch, but also any defect of vision or hearing, and any other fact which may have a bearing on the character of the work which may reasonably be expected from each. Special cases receive special attention, and suggestions as to their management are given for the assistance of their future teachers. It also shows just what each is worth in every division of each subject.

Reclassification Needed.

(8) Under the plan used in New York it is almost impossible to reclassify pupils more than twice a year. All authorities agree that there can be no proper plan of organization without provision for reclassification whenever needed. Feasibility of reclassification is acknowledged to be the supreme test of a proper plan of organization. In Elizabeth 6 per cent. of the pupils enrolled are reclassified each month. This is undisputable proof not only of the need of reclassification, but of its feasibility under a flexible plan of organization. It is also positive proof of the fact that from 250,000 to 300,000 children in New York City should be reclassified yearly, in order that they may have work suited to their advancement.

Shade Trees for This City.

Four American elms, each of them 25 feet in height, will be planted to-day in front of the School of the Ethical Culture Society, Central Park West and Sixty-third Street. These trees spent their youth in the country, and the arrangements for moving them have been carefully made. When they are settled they will have incentives to growth possessed by no other trees in New York City. Mrs. Ralph Schainwald ordered the trees as a memorial to the late Dr. Nefti.

WEALTH DOES NOT BRING JOY—ROCKEFELLER, JR.

"Take My Word for It," He Tells His Bible Class.

COVETING IS TOO COMMON

The Young Leader May Go to Lakewood with His Infant Son to Visit His Father.

"Don't make the mistake of believing that in the possession of things there is happiness," said John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to his Bible class in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church yesterday. "There is no real, permanent happiness in mere possession. Take my word for it, having wealth does not mean having happiness. If you believe so you will live to find yourself mistaken."

Mr. Rockefeller laid great stress on his "Take my word for it." Although he raised his voice out of the even tone he always uses in his Biblical disquisitions, he did not seem inclined to linger on the question of wealth and happiness. He turned from the subject to the further consideration of the sin of coveting "thy neighbor's goods."

"The other Commandments," he declared, "are direct injunctions against actual performance of wrong. The tenth is a Commandment which bids us avoid doing wrong in our thought. The thought is father to the deed, and the man who thinks evil is just as blameworthy as the man who does evil.

"Coveting is too common in this day. There is not a man who does not covet something that his neighbor has. And how rife is the spirit of envy. The country boy comes to the city wearing clothes that are considered very good apparel in his village, but when he sees the clothes of the city man he must have those instead of what he wears, and he gets them by one way or another. There is only one phase of covetousness that we may rightly possess; that is the coveting of the spirit of brotherliness and the good traits of our neighbor. To secure these things does not take away from the man whose virtues we covet. His store is not depleted.

"The observance of the Tenth Commandment is essential to the formation of character. To be envious and covet and to harbor evil in the mind is as blameworthy as to do evil things.

"In the written laws given beyond the Ten Commandments arises one law that interests me and which I would like to touch on. This law may be summed up in the question: 'Am I my brother's keeper?' If I dig a well and leave it uncovered and my neighbor's ox falls into it I am responsible for his loss. The law is as binding to-day as it ever was. The moment we become a part of a civilized community we become amenable to this law. Each of us is his brother's keeper. The man who realizes his responsibility for his brother's life and moral course realizes a great responsibility. If we obey all the written laws and do nothing else we are only negatively good. We must have a positive and aggressive goodness, we must have the altruistic or the Christy spirit, which alone makes us good and helpful in life."

Mr. Rockefeller also raised the interesting question whether the Mosaic laws sanctioning polygamy and slavery were rightful laws in their time, and expressed his abhorrence of the law of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. He asked opinions of the class on these questions. Smith, "the Scotchman," held that the coming of Christ abrogated the old laws. Other members argued as to the possible fitness of laws for people under different conditions than now exist.

"It seems to me," said Mr. Rockefeller, "that the laws for polygamy and slavery demonstrate that legislation cannot go in advance of public opinion. The people were then accustomed to polygamy and slavery, and under the conditions the laws given to them were the best that could be afforded. If laws had been framed against these customs they would not have been obeyed, and their existence might have brought about greater evils."

Mr. Rockefeller then announced that he was going to take a vacation of three weeks from his class. He urged the class itself not to take a vacation because its leader would be absent, saying that his absence was or should be the occasion for the members to stick by the Sunday morning hour of Biblical study. The pastor and his assistant would take turns in leading.

Efforts to find out where Mr. Rockefeller is going for his Bible class vacation were unsuccessful. Many of the class members believe that he will go to Lakewood with Mrs. Rockefeller and their infant son to visit John D. Rockefeller, Sr.

BRONX PARK CROWDED.

Boardwalk Blaze Interests Some of the Many Visitors at the Zoo.

Bronx Park was crowded with thousands of visitors from all parts of Greater New York yesterday, the principal points of interest being the Botanical Gardens and the Zoological Garden.

The weather was ideal for tramping about. Trees and shrubbery were budding, and the long stretches of lawns showed signs of throwing off their rusty coats, and here and there were patches of bright green. That the gardeners had been busy was evident from the number of flower beds laid out. Sprouting from many of them were the hardy little tulip stalks of Spring.

At the Zoological Garden all records for attendance so far this year were broken. It was estimated that there were fully 35,000 visitors to the park in the day. Considerable excitement was caused in the afternoon by a fire near the lion house. While the crush of visitors was at its height there was a cry of "Fire!" Several of the keepers rushed from the lion house and found that the boardwalk, which is about twenty feet wide, and leads from the lion house to the fox den, was afire and blazing quite briskly in several places. The park alarm was sounded, and attendants from all points ran up with buckets and hooks. A line of hose was also brought. The blaze was extinguished without difficulty. Somebody had dropped a lighted match or cigar stump between the cracks in the boards and had set fire to the rubbish underneath.

The famous spectacled cobra laid twenty-four small, leathery-looking eggs on Saturday, and as a result came in for no end of attention not only from the keepers, but from the public, yesterday. These are the first eggs laid by the cobra. They are expected to hatch out in about six weeks.

Funeral of Edwin C. Swift.

BEVERLY, Mass., April 8.—The funeral of Edwin C. Swift of the firm of Swift & Co., the Chicago meat packers, who died early Thursday morning at the Quincy House in Boston, from pneumonia, was held at Beverly Farms to-day. The services were conducted in St. John's Church by the Rev. E. J. V. Huiginn, rector of the church, assisted by the Rev. De Witt S. Clark of Salem, who married Mr. and Mrs. Swift at Sagamore. The service was the simple Episcopal ritual for the burial of the dead. The body was taken to Forest Hills Cemetery and placed in the receiving vault to await the arrival of Mrs. Swift from Europe.

He Starved to Death.

Charles Hatch, 55 years old, was found dead in a little room in a ramshackle place at 2,873 Seventh Avenue, yesterday morning. He had starved to death, said Dr. Corden of J. Hood Wright Hospital. The man had done odd jobs for Peter Mulvey, who has a small veterinary place at 2,839 Broadway. Grocers in the neighborhood knew him for his pitifully small purchases of milk and bread.

Consular Clerk Loses His Memory.

Emilio Figuerado, a clerk in the Venezuelan Consulate, went over to Brooklyn on Saturday on business, and did not return. A general alarm was sent out for him, and last night he was taken to his home at 65 West 100th Street by the Adams Street Station police. They had found him wandering about late on Saturday night suffering from loss of memory. Papers in his pocket established his identity.

HE'D BE A BROKER, TOO.

Youth Marches Solemnly Around the Roped-in Curb Market.

Callahan, the curb market's guardian policeman, is struggling with a problem.

When he got the post on Broad Street a few weeks ago Callahan was told to allow no one but brokers and their runners inside of the McAdoo rope boundaries. The problem appeared Monday morning in the shape of a bony, long-haired young man, with a nice brown beard. Callahan spotted him for an outsider.

"Take a walk," said Callahan; "nothing doing for you in here. This is the curb market, where they sell stocks."

The young man explained that that was just what he wanted to do. He was waiting for customers. Callahan retreated to think it over. It was a dull day in the market, and some of the curb crowd took the whiskered youth in hand. When the policeman looked again he found the youth in a crowd of idle traders lifting his shrill voice to the high windows of the surrounding buildings. The brokers told him if he'd yell loud enough the firms away up high would throw him orders out the windows. He stood up patiently calling out the names suggested by the crowd. Callahan led him gently away.

"How am I going to learn to be a broker," he complained, "if you won't let me try. Pa thinks I ought to stay on the farm for fifteen a month. Why, I can make a thousand down here. I want to be a broker, and you can't stop me."

Callahan was sure that he couldn't stay inside the ropes, because he wasn't trading, but there was nothing in the orders about learners, so he compromised by letting him hang around outside the ropes, provided he kept moving.

Every day last week the young man appeared with the opening of the market and stayed till the close, parading around the ropes with measured strides, his hands behind his back, and a steady stare on the traders, learning how. He has had several offers of jobs as runner, with the stipulation that he get a hair cut and a shave, but he insists on starting in as a full-fledged trader.

"If a man look sharply, he will see Fortune, for though she is blind, she is not invisible."

The manufacturer must seek opportunity. It will not seek him. The people in this country are not going to rise and ask for his goods. On the contrary, he must find out methods of bringing his product to the people who would use it.

It is difficult to offer the right thing at the right time to any one person, but by offering the right thing at the same time to several million people you are sure to be just in time for a great many of them. A percentage of the circulation of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL would in itself be a big business for most manufacturers. There are very few businesses big enough to supply more than the homes represented by THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL with any one article. It is safe to say that no one manufacturer is supplying these millions of homes, and probably ever will, but it is certainly true that it is worth while to cultivate adequately the readers of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL with sufficient space and with sufficient persistence, because the field is large enough by itself to deserve your best efforts.

HARPERS BOOKS

THE SPOILERS

By Rex E. Beach

This is a story written by a strong man, of a strong man, for strong and grown up men to read. It is a tale such as is told by a man perhaps once in a lifetime—a tale of impetuous emotion, of brute strength and courage, of swift and passionate love and hate—a tale which tells itself without fine words—vigorous, forceful, mighty. There is no room for the violet conventions of society in that robust land where

"Never a law of God or Man runs north of Fifty-three."

The only law is the law of possession, of individual conscience, and of hunger—the hunger for gold digged out of the hills, and the blinding hunger of man for woman and for woman's love. It is a story of to-day, but it goes back to the root of things, and is true of all men and all real women since time began.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Trading in last week's stock market, conducted, as it was, under such developments as a 30 per cent. call money rate, a strike in the bituminous coal regions, the threat of a strike in the anthracite regions, and extraordinary losses of cash from day to day by the local banks, was largely in the nature of an attempt to gather figs from thistles. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of this situation was that the efforts were so nearly successful, for at the close of trading on Friday, the last full day of the week, the general average of prices was practically unchanged from that obtaining on the same day in the preceding week. Explanation of the steadiness of prices under such depressing conditions is found, of course, in the optimism with which Wall Street looks upon prevailing disturbing factors, and it is undoubtedly true that to some extent, at least, this cheerful view of these matters is warranted by the facts. Thus in the money market no one expects that such rates as prevailed last week are to continue in effect for any length of time, for it is well understood that the conditions bringing them about are largely temporary in their nature and are subject to betterment through the gold engagements foreshadowed by the great decline in demand sterling. In the bituminous situation the ameliorating influence is, of course, the freedom with which owners of producing mines are signing the 1903 wage scale in order to keep their properties running. No change has developed in the anthracite situation, since final decision upon the proposition of the miners to arbitrate matters in dispute is not to be had until to-day, but the willingness of the workers to submit to arbitration gave rise to hopes last week that some composition of differences might result. If this does not come, however, there is still cheer to be found by Wall Street in the fact that many signs point to a brief suspension of mining operation. Two other developments of the week of favorable import were the renewed activity in the iron trade, accompanied by decided firmness in prices, and the cheerful tenor of the official reports from several Winter wheat States as to the condition of the plant, as well as the optimistic forecasts of grain trade authorities. The State of Missouri reported a condition only a few points under that of the April figures a year ago, while Ohio returned a condition of 101 for Winter wheat, as against 87 at this time in the previous year. The expectation of a favorable Government report to-morrow is therefore very general, and if this expectation proves well founded, the financial markets will be accordingly benefited.

Coming at the moment when our own money market was passing through an unexpectedly severe stringency, the action of the Bank of England in reducing its discount rate from 4 per cent. to 3½ per cent. atracted no little attention and gave rise to what may prove to be extravagant hopes. There is no question, of course, of the importance of the English bank's step, so far as this is looked upon as presaging eventual ease in money throughout Europe. Just as the action of the Directors of the Bank in September last in advancing the official discount rate was followed by a hardening of money at Continental centres, which has prevailed with only the slightest diminution up to this time, so the present decision to lower the rate may be the precursor of declines in discount rates among European banks generally. Announcement of the reduction was followed by a sharp break in demand sterling, the rate falling on Friday to 4.8455. On this basis gold might be easily and freely imported into this country were it not for the fact that it is extremely difficult to secure gold either at London or upon the Continent, and the fact that each arrival of gold from South Africa or elsewhere, in Europe, will have to be bid for, discloses the state of affairs and offsets in some measure, at least, the optimism which a reduction in the Bank rate would otherwise wholly justify. The gold hitherto obtained from Berlin has been, in the first instance, from Russian sources, and is understood to be limited in supply. Berlin offered our bankers $3,000,000 early in the week, but it was not taken, and on the next day went to Paris, which displays continued eagerness to secure gold, a fact which in itself would seem to preclude heavy engagements in that city for this market. Nevertheless continued weakness in exchange and continued activity in money here will bring gold. Exchange is likely to remain weak, owing to the heavy sales of American securities abroad, as well as participation there in many of our recent underwriting syndicates, while money is equally liable to remain active here, owing to the volume of business the country over and the interior demands arising from preparations for crop planting. Ease in the money situation should come before the close of the present month, and if it does the necessity for importations of gold will at once disappear. Last week's extreme interest rates were due to unexpectedly heavy shipments to Philadelphia and Boston, the maturing of heavy time loans which could only be replaced with day to day money, exceptionally heavy drains to the Government direct, and transfers to New Orleans and San Francisco and the unsettlement of the money market incident to the April disbursements. As these demands diminish or vanish the situation will ease, but it is only through importations of gold that early additions to the bank reserves can be made.

For many reasons the railroad earnings statements for the month of February now coming to hand are of exceptional interest. In themselves they constitute a chronicle of prosperity in all sections of the country which has never before been so pleasingly presented. Last week there were reported increases in net earnings of $622,000 and $339,000 respectively by the Union and Southern Pacific Roads and of $135,000 by the Denver & Rio Grande, these three properties reflecting the volume of business now carried on in the Southwest, the Middle West, and the extreme West. The Pennsylvania returned a gain of $1,140,000 in its February net earnings, this in the same way illustrating the activity in the territory served by this great railroad's lines. In the previous week the Rock Island and 'Frisco reported net gains of $800,000 and $700,000 respectively, while the Atchison increased its net earnings in the same month $1,500,000. Some seventy-six railroads, thus far reporting for the month of February, have returned increases of $29,877,000 in gross earnings and of $12,108,000 in net earnings, the increase in net earnings amounting in percentages to 68.14. One of the most satisfactory features of this splendid situation lies in the fact that with the tide of prosperity in the railroad world mounting higher than ever before in the history of this country, those who are in charge of the conduct of these huge enterprises are found fully alive to the opportunities presented for the permanent betterment of their properties. Where the general policy of the railroads not many years ago was to pay big dividends at all costs, railroad managers now are following with reasonable closeness the famous Pennsylvania maxim of "one dollar for improvements and one dollar for dividends," although in many cases the dividend payments are overshadowed by the sums set aside for improvements of one kind and another. Thus in the case of the Atchison, which has made the biggest gain in net earnings reported in the last fortnight, simultaneously with its announcement to this effect it was learned that the management of the road had placed orders for almost 70,000 tons of steel rails, these being supplementary to former orders aggregating 57,000 tons. The extreme of this policy is found perhaps in the Southern Pacific, whose gain of $622,000 in net for the month of February was obtained after there had been taken from income account and expended in maintenance $800,000 more than had been used for the same purpose in the month of February, 1905, although in that year also maintenance charges were heavy and wholly adequate. In the eight months of the current fiscal year it has been estimated that the Southern Pacific has devoted to such purposes $2,500,000 of net earnings, which might well have gone to stockholders if the old policy, or even a moderately liberal policy, prevailed in the conduct of its affairs. The edge of criticism in this respect, however, is dulled by the fact that such liberality in maintenance served to reduce the cost of conducting transportation, this cost on the Southern Pacific for the eight months mentioned having been some 30 per cent. of gross earnings, as against 35.6 per cent. in 1905, the previous record year in this regard. As a result of the general application of these conservative methods there is provided assurance that the railroads of this country will be placed in such shape that the lean years, which even the oldest and most matured country cannot hope to escape, will, when they come, never again leave behind them such a trail of bankrupt railroads as marked the year 1893.

RECORD COPPER PRODUCTION.

Lake Mines Turning Out More Than Ever Before—Development Work by Numerous Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 7.—Producers of copper are withstanding the temptation to advance prices, preferring to let well enough alone for the present. Quotations for export have been made at 18.55, while 18⅝ has been recorded on more than one occasion. Letters from the lake confirm previous statements regarding the great demand for the refined metal; smelters are rushing their product to Eastern markets without waiting for lake navigation to open, which will be very soon now.

All records for production are being broken at the lake. The Michigan smelter of the Stanton-Paine Mines turned out approximately 7,500,000 pounds of fine copper last month. The Franklin Mine has sold its output until the middle of May at 18⅜ cents downward. Allouez is stamping about 500 tons daily and shipped 12,320 tons of ore to the Centennial Mill in March, which yielded 38.21 pounds to the ton.

Other March outputs were: Baltic, 835 tons of mineral; Trimountain, 621; Champion, 957—a total of 1,986 tons for the Copper Range Consolidated. All these figures show large advances over February. President Stanwood of Winona says his company is to begin production at once.

Mohawk reports rich ground being opened in the lower levels of Nos. 1 and 2 shafts; drifting south from the new No. 5 shaft also shows productive ground.

The Adventure Mine produced 175 tons of mineral last month, and the Quincy 1,212 tons. The latter's production for three months foots up 3,497 tons, against 3,407 tons last year. The Wolverine's was 510 tons of mineral, making 1,494 tons for three months, against 1,539 tons last year.

Now that Heinze has obtained control of Bingham, Utah people are looking for further consolidations and mergers in their State; they do not believe he will be content with his present holdings there.

Boston Consolidated's diamond drilling is reported to have resulted satisfactorily. The recent strike in Troy-Manhattan is said to be the most important the company has yet made.

A circular of protest against the present management of Adventure was issued this week by Dane, Smith & Co., who say:

"In a general way expense of operating a Michigan mine can be estimated at about $100 per man per month, or $1,000 per drilling machine. In other words, the Adventure could operate 31 machines, or employ 310 men, and pay all expenses from the proceeds of its present production, and the present surplus of at least $108,000 would seem to be sufficient, without collecting the balance of the last assessment, amounting to 50 cents a share, payable in July."

A sharp advance in Trinity the last of the week brought out a "tissue" from President Lawson in which he declared that he had no hand in the movement. Nevertheless the Street laughs. New York sends Boston hints that the long-mentioned "deal" is about ready, but which deal?

The party which went three weeks ago to explore the Cole properties has not returned. It is believed that the scope of the negotiations includes the acquisition of the Arizona Commercial and the Old Dominion. This would give the Cole interests control of the entire Globe camp, with one of the best refining and smelting plants in the country.

The Raven Company has started drifting east on the north vein on the 1,500-foot level east of the Snoozer.

There has been an advance of 4 points in East Butte stock within three weeks. The daily output is said to be 20,000 pounds this month, against 18,000 in February, and in addition the company's receipts from leases are $1,000 a day.

BRITISH INDUSTRIES CONTINUE PROSPEROUS

Railway Traffic and Board of Trade Returns Encouraging.

COTTON DEMAND IMPROVES

Excellent Market for Woolens—Steady Trade in Manufactured Iron and Steel.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

LONDON, April 8.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"The trade and industrial reports for the past week indicate that the markets were generally firm or tending upward, and, though some raw materials were less active, the commercial position appeared sound. This view was confirmed by the railway traffic and Board of Trade returns.

"Breadstuffs tended in sellers' favor. Maize was irregular. Oats advanced. Oilseed ruled firm.

"The cotton trade had continued activity in the raw material at higher prices. Yarns sold freely. Cloth engagements were further increased.

"Native wool was less active, but continued strong. Colonial wool sold well at an advance. Yarns were strong. Woolens had an excellent market.

"Pig iron was irregular, with a good inquiry, and, while manufactured iron and steel were less active in some districts, there was steady trade with a satisfactory outlook.

"Copper and tin were strong."

BERLIN BOERSE ACTIVE.

The Settlement of the Morocco Question Has a Good Effect.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

BERLIN, April 8.—The settlement of the Morocco question had a good effect on the Boerse. Reserve gave place to general activity, the most striking feature of the last few days being the eagerness of the general public to buy mining shares and other industrial stocks.

A certain weakness which was observed in Russian Government stocks and railway debentures was the result of the reports that the German Government was disinclined to encourage the issue of a new Russian loan in the German market. It is not to be denied that the attitude of Russia at Algeciras was viewed unfavorably in Government circles, and consequently there is no great desire to relieve the embarrassments of Russian finance by facilitating the placing of a new Russian loan in this country.

A strong demand for money was caused by the quarterly settlement, and there was for a time considerable stringency. Private discount has fallen to 3⅛ per cent. and it is expected that the money market will now be easier. A reduction of the rate by the Imperial Bank is also looked for, but the development of the discount policy of the Bank of England will probably exercise some influence.

The strain upon the resources of the money market in the last few months, due among other causes to the forced increase of exports and imports arising from the changes in the German tariff and the tariffs of other countries, should be relieved now that the new tariffs are in operation.

On the other hand, the time is approaching when the new Imperial and Prussian loans will be issued, which will call for fresh exertions, while the proposed new Russian loan will effectually preclude any influx of French money.

The Russian State Bank has sent 8,000,000 rubles to Berlin for the payment of the interest on Russian loans.

PRICES DECLINE IN PARIS.

Cheerful Tone at Beginning of Week, Followed by Stagnation.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

PARIS, April 8.—The monthly settlement last week passed off better than was expected, the average contango rates being lower than had been predicted.

A cheerful tone was perceptible in all sections at the opening of the week's business, but hesitancy soon developed in the absence of new buyers and a general decline in prices followed. The reduction of the Bank of England rate failed to stimulate the market, which at times bordered on stagnation.

Bank shares showed moderate activity, because home financial institutions are believed to be preparing the field for important new issues.

French rentes, South Americans, Spanish, and Turkish were about unchanged. Russian fours declined in anticipation of the new loan, but Russian treasury bonds advanced.

Rio Tintos recovered over 20f. a share on a more favorable interpretation of the annual report and also on the good prospects of the copper industry for the immediate future. The South African department remained dull.

Subscriptions to increased capital of the Société Général amounting to 50,000,000f. will open on April 17. The new stock is being offered at a premium of 135f. a share, preferential rights being reserved for the actual shareholders.

GIVE LARGE RETURN TO LABOR

An Interesting Comparison of the Steel and Railroad Industries.

This is a country of steelmaking and railroading. We produce more than one-third of the world's total of iron and steel, and, what is more to the point, either of these two industries supports more of our people than any other except the multitudinous activities that the Government statisticians lump together under the head of agriculture. Together they pay out more than a billion dollars each year in salaries, and may be reckoned as supporting about 9 per cent. of our 92,000,000 population.

The latest available Government statistics of the railroads of the United States cover the fiscal year of 1903-4, a period of depression in which transportation was at a low ebb. Because of the large increase since then in almost every figure of the statistics whatever comparisons are made must be considered as underestimated.

Taking the Government figures, however, the railroads give employment to 1,296,121 men, paying them $817,598,810, or an average yearly wage of $631. The United States Steel Corporation in 1905 had 180,158 employes, and the year's wages were $128,052,955, an average of $710 per man.

One of the most interesting facts in a comparison of the two great industries is the relation of the wage charges to the gross earnings. The United States Steel Corporations, which reported gross earnings for last year of $585,331,736, used up nearly 20 per cent. of this sum in footing the pay roll. The railroads in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1904, when every expenditure was at a rock-bottom basis, paid out more than twice this proportion, or nearly 50 per cent. of gross earnings, to employes. In the one case salaries exceeded the net earnings by about 7 per cent. and in the other by about 28 per cent.

In addition to turning over to the workingman a far greater sum actually and proportionately, the railroads should be further endeared to labor by the fact that they give to capital only about 5 per cent. of net earnings. The steel industry, represented by the United States Steel Corporation, which last year produced 51.7 per cent. of the country's output of steel and iron, returns 8 1-3 per cent.

Offsetting this point in the railroads' favor is the grim list of casualties each year. The latest available figures show that one railroad man in every nineteen must count on receiving some injury sufficiently serious to count in the statistics and one in each 357 must expect to lose his life each year.

TOLD AROUND THE TICKER.

ALFRED H. CURTIS, President of the National Bank of North America, since the publication of the bank's loss through its defaulting note teller has been inundated by suggestions from many sources regarding methods of preventing similar losses in the future. Various checking systems have been suggested, some of them more or less plausible. Others among Mr. Curtis's unknown friends showed utter distrust of all accounting methods. Each conceived some way of his own to prevent loss by the dishonesty of employes. The one that was the source of most amusement to the bank's officers came from a man in a small town up the State. He wrote that he had seen the offices of the bank, and noticed that they had ornaments in the ceiling, in the centre of which were placed electric light bulbs. He suggested that at regular intervals these bulbs be replaced with peepholes and that men be stationed at these holes to watch the clerks while they were at work. Then, he said, they never could steal anything without its being known to the man above. He did not go as far as suggesting a check on the honesty of these watchers in the ceiling.

JAMES HOBART MOORE is back in town again. At the height of the boom market in January Mr. Moore stocked up his private car, gathered his ever-faithful following, and went West, having previously cleaned out a long line of stocks. With his departure prices began to drop, and before the bottom was reached the market had gone off 20 to 30 points. This is a performance that Mr. Moore repeats with regularity. Some people call it luck, but the consistency with which he gets out at the top looks more like a real genius for speculation. Mr. Moore is the prize speculator of the Rock Island crowd. He will tackle anything from lard to railroads, and when the time for his perennial departure west comes round the Street has heard of another Moore killing.

CHARLES H. TWEED of Speyer & Co., who sailed Saturday for a two months' vacation abroad, is one of the many successful Wall Street men who have graduated into finance from the legal profession. Mr. Tweed was for a long time intimately connected with the affairs of the Huntington estate, thus gaining an inside knowledge of the Southern Pacific, which made his recent retirement, along with James Speyer, from the board of that company all the more remarkable in the eyes of the Street. While Mr. Tweed's trip is primarily for recreation, he is the foreign department chief of his firm, and will probably not lose the opportunity while abroad to gather crumbs of valuable knowledge.

E. H. HARRIMAN finds time to give a great deal of attention to the Boys' Club, an organization of east side youngsters, now in its twenty-ninth season of successful activity. The club, in fact, is almost entirely a Wall Street philanthropy, and the Street supplies not only the sinews of war, but the personal interest that makes it swing along. The list of Trustees reads like a financial "Who's Who." Besides Mr. Harriman, there are Otto H. Kahn, Eliphalet N. Potter, Alvin W. Krech, Percy A. Rockefeller, Herman Kinnicut, and many others. Mr. Kahn's special interest is the boys' orchestra, and the football team is more or less under the wing of Mr. Potter.

OTTO H. KAHN, like many other New York financiers, of whom J. P. Morgan is perhaps the most distinguished, has done much to put American art lovers in his debt. His recent purchase of Romney's famous portrait of "Three Children of Captain Little" is only one great painting that he has brought to this country. His collection contains many excellent examples of the famous eighteenth century painters. Last year he secured a notable Nattier at the price said to have been close to $75,000, and has also among his collection canvases of Boucher that rank with the best works of that favorite of the Court of Mme. de Pompadour.

K. C., M. & O. Extension.

The Railroad Commission of the State of Texas has granted permission to the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway to issue bonds at the rate of $20,000 a mile on 549 miles of line now constructed or to be constructed by the company in the State of Texas. It is stated that 58 miles of the road are now in operation and 138 miles additional have been graded. The total cost of the road is placed at $64,500 a mile. The completion of this line in Texas will give the company a continuous line from Kansas City to the Mexican border.

CALL MONEY IN APRIL

Last Week's Rate Highest in Any Year Since 1873.

FOREIGN LOANS PAID OFF

Heavy Withdrawals of Cash by Interior—Temporary Financing by New York City and Other Borrowers.

Last week's advance in call money to 30 per cent., the highest rate quoted in the first week of April in any year since 1873, was a genuine surprise to the financial community. Bankers as well as traders were taken unawares by this sudden development of stringency in the money market, for nothing more had been anticipated than that for a day or two while the April disbursements were in progress call money might remain at 10 or 12 per cent. It was suggested in many quarters that the known factors in the situation failed to satisfactorily explain the advance in call money to the highest rate for more than a generation at this season. When all the factors are assembled, however, there is apparently less reason than appeared at first sight for the surprise which was expressed so generally last week.

At the close of the week international bankers pointed out that one very important item which had failed in the week's discussion to be given its due share of consideration was the heavy withdrawal recently of foreign funds from this market. A vast amount of finance bills put out during January matured at the beginning of April, and in most instances were paid off instead of being renewed. A prominent banker stated yesterday that in his opinion an advance in money at the close of March would have resulted in the renewal of a large proportion of these finance bills, in which event, he said, the stringency of last week would have been averted. At the rates prevailing at the close of March bankers preferred to pay off these foreign loans rather than renew them, but had money shown signs of the stringency which developed last week they would, it is thought, have postponed the final payment of this indebtedness of the New York market to the financial centres of Europe.

Apart from the shifting to this market of loans which have for several months been carried abroad, the monetary situation at this centre was submitted to a serious strain by the heavy withdrawals of cash by the interior. The New York banks lost to the Sub-Treasury not only as a result of the direct operations with the Government, but also because of the transfers to New Orleans and San Francisco. In addition to the money which went out in this way, the banks made very heavy shipments to their correspondents at Boston, Philadelphia, and many interior cities, which greatly reduced the supply of cash at this centre. Another factor of importance was the temporary borrowing done by the City of New York and other borrowers whose loans matured earlier in the week and which were provided for by temporary borrowings.

The two loans of $2,500,000 made by the National City Bank to the City of New York are said to have been secured from that bank under an agreement between the bank and the city that the bank stands ready to loan the city at any time $10,000,000 at a rate not higher than 6 per cent. This agreement between the bank and the city is said to have been the consideration for which the National City Bank was appointed the principal depository of New York City funds. The loans made by the bank to the city last week carried 5 per cent. interest, or 1 per cent. less than the maximum allowed under the terms of the agreement.

Much interest attaches at this time to the usual course of the call money market at this season. As already stated, call money last week reached 30 per cent. in the first week in April for the first time since 1873; excepting the year 1880, the same statement can be applied to the whole month of April. Just what the high and low call money rates have been during the month of April in each year since 1873, to which year it is necessary to go back to find a parallel for last week's quotation, are shown in the following table:

APRIL CALL MONEY RATES.

	High.	Low.		High.	Low.
1906	30	6	1889	10	1½
1905	7	2½	1888	5	1¼

An interesting fact in connection with the condition of our money market during the latter part of last week was that exchange rates were at the gold import point without any substantial amount of gold being secured for import. This was due to the fact that there were no new arrivals of gold in the European markets, and the prices of gold fixed by the banks prevented any being taken from those sources. During the week demand sterling declined a full cent to the pound sterling, selling as low as $4.8450. The first import of gold this season, arranged about a month ago by the National City Bank, was announced when demand sterling was selling at $4.8535. It is expected that Monday's arrivals of new gold in London will be taken by New York bankers. If the volume of gold secured is substantial the New York market, it is believed, should speedily respond to the relief that will be secured in this way.

TO ELECTRIFY ITALIAN LINES.

Westinghouse Interests in Alliance with a Company Headed by Dr. Finzi.

A combination has been effected between the Westinghouse interests and one of the largest electrical concerns in Italy, for the purpose of undertaking important contracts for the electrification of Italian railroads.

The deal has been made between the Société Anonyme Westinghouse, the five-million-dollar company which takes care of most of the Westinghouse business in Continental Europe, and the Officine Elettro-Ferroviarie, a seven-million-five-hundred-thousand-dollar concern, of which Dr. George Finzi, the pioneer in Italy in the use of single-phase motors in traction, is the active head.

Under this alliance electrical installations will be carried out by the two organizations together. The installation of single-phase electric lines will bear the name Westinghouse-Finzi.

Jersey Towns May Combine.

HARRISON, N. J., April 8.—The West Hudson County Board of Trade has adopted a resolution providing for a bill combining the towns of Harrison, East Newark, and Kearny in a new county. It is believed that the consolidation would mean a saving of $30,000 to the towns each year.

GERMAN BANKS' PROFITS.

Reports of Biggest Berlin Banks Compared with Ours.

The relative profits of banking in Berlin and New York are signally demonstrated to the advantage of Germany by a comparison of the figures for 1905 of two of the leading banks of the German Empire with our own two largest institutions.

According to the reports recently come to hand of the Deutscher Bank and the Disconto Gesselschaft, the net earnings of the two are sufficient to pay 13 1-10 per cent. on their combined capital of $87,500,000; the net earnings of New York's two largest financial institutions, the National City Bank and the National Bank of Commerce, would pay 2 7-20 per cent. less, or 10¾ per cent. on their combined capital of $50,000,000.

The dividends actually paid, as shown in the table below, are relatively much smaller in New York than in Berlin, chiefly for the reason that the Berlin banks work with enormously larger capital and are not required by law to maintain large reserves, though it is the practice to keep cash reserves in hand, which are less than our own legal requirements, but represent a considerable percentage of the banks' funds. The result of these circumstances is that the Berlin banks pay out in dividends each year practically all of the net earnings and carry to surplus account only an inconsiderable amount, which is little more than an odd cash balance retained on the books as a convenience of bookkeeping.

A feature of German bank management which should be taken into account in considering net earnings is the extremely liberal treatment of their employes by the German banks. Of the earnings of the Deutscher Bank in 1905 $184,428 went to the payment of gratuities to employes and Directors and old age pensions. The Disconto Gesselschaft provides even more liberally for its employes. There was very nearly $1,000,000 set aside for its pension fund last year, and the bank's earnings were further taxed to pay 5 per cent. interest on $1,147,724 of its employes' savings left on deposit. This rate is paid to employes regardless of the prevailing interest rate. These gratuities amount to so considerable a sum that they should be considered in footing up the proportion of net earnings to capital, especially since there is no corresponding drain on the earnings of the banks here. Altogether the sums paid out in this way by the Deutscher and Disconto Gesselschaft Banks would, if not diverted, raise the net earnings to 14 per cent. of their capital.

The German banks have so much more freedom in their affairs than our own that it is difficult to say whether the better showing of profits made by the Berlin institutions is due to better management or the superior opportunities the German law allows. A German bank combines activities that in New York would be separated into several businesses. It is practically a banking house, a trust company, an underwriting house, and an industrial establishment all in one.

IRON SUPPLIES DECREASING.

Steel Corporation Assured of Coal Supply—Rail Orders Very Heavy.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., April 7.—Orders for the remainder of the year in pig iron will soon have to be placed by a large number of foundries and steel mills that are making inquiries for prices and deliveries. The stock piles of nearly all concerns are growing smaller, and the concerns that have orders placed are clamoring insistently for prompt deliveries. There is no new buying, however. A canvass is being made by the pig-iron producers to learn the true situation, and it has been discovered that the stocks of concerns not producing pig iron will not hold out until the close of April, while most of the contracts for future delivery expire June 1.

Bessemer pig iron can be bought for $17.25 at the furnace; No. 2 foundry at $16.75 and $17; basic iron, $17; forge, $16 per ton. It is believed that some of these prices might be shaded slightly, but not as much as 25 cents a ton.

There has been quite a slump in the production of pig iron and coke during March and there will be a slight decrease in April. Owing to the closing down of the bituminous coal mines and anthracite mines, there will be an increased demand for coke, especially in the East, where anthracite and coke are combined and used for fuel. As far as the United States Steel Corporation is concerned, and some of the largest corporations manufacturing steel and iron, they are well taken care of, as they have contracts with the Pittsburg Coal Company based on the mining rate. The Pittsburg Company is bound under the contract to supply the coal at all hazards, hence the action taken by F. L. Robbins in accepting the offer of the miners to work for the 1903 scale of wages.

The bar-iron market is now down to bottom and wrought-iron bars are offered at $1.60 per hundred pounds, Pittsburg. This is a decline of 40 cents within the past two months. Steel bars are selling at $1.50. Muck bars are quoted at $28.50, and may go lower. The maximum on the recent rise was $32.50, Pittsburg.

Steel billets and bars are likely to become more scarce. One of the big Republic mills at Youngstown, Ohio, is to be taken off billets and put on rails. The Carnegie Steel Company has also one of its billet mills put on rails. Billets are selling at $27 per ton for Bessemer and $28 per ton for open-hearth. Bars are $28 per ton, the same as heavy rails.

The sheet and tin plate mills are hampered because of a lack of bars, but in spite of this prices are going down. Sales of No. 28 gauge sheets have been made at $2.30 per hundred pounds. The American Sheet Steel and Tin Plate Company quotes $2.40. Last year the big sheet company fixed a price of $2.35, and the independents sold as low as $2.20 and $2.25, compelling the sheet company to lower its quotations. When the low contracts expired recently, the consumers refused to place contracts at $2.40. Rather than close down their plants, some of the independents accepted contracts for $2.30. Owing to the high price of bars, this almost shut the sheet mills out that have not their own supply of billets.

The rail production continues to be phenomenal, and the demand has passed all dreams and expectations. One of the surprising features of the buying is that the railroads are placing additional orders after having placed large orders last year for this year's delivery. The total output of rails this year will probably be greater than 4,500,000 tons.

Scrap metal is touching the bottom, and sales of heavy melting stock have been as low as $14.25 per ton. This almost makes a record for low prices when the trend of business is taken into consideration.

The machinery and supply makers are receiving large orders for equipment. This will add materially to the pig-iron tonnage eventually. The brokers are predicting that another boom will soon come along and carry prices upward again, and that the concerns holding off will have to pay higher prices.

TRAFFIC IN BITUMINOUS

Forms Large Percentage of Freight on Many Lines.

SOFT COAL IN THE WEST

Nearly 46 Per Cent. of 'Frisco's Freight Business is Soft Coal—Wyoming and Colorado Important Producers.

The cessation of work by a large percentage of the bituminous coal miners of the country is an event regarded in many quarters as directly affecting relatively few of the railroads throughout the country. The collateral effects are recognized as being widespread, but the general impression seems to be that bituminous coal is an important item in the business of only a few railroads. It is recalled, of course, that the Hocking Valley derives about two-thirds of its traffic from bituminous coal, and that perhaps a third of the Pennsylvania Railroad's traffic consists of the same product. Sight is lost, however, of the fact that bituminous coal supplies a very substantial percentage of the total traffic of a number of railroads, some of them operating in the Southwest and some in other portions of the country, where coal mining is generally believed to be on a very small scale.

It is interesting to note that nearly 46 per cent. of the total traffic over the St. Louis & San Francisco lines consists of bituminous coal. Of the 22,187,068 tons of all classes of freight carried by the St. Louis & San Francisco last year, 10,178,969 tons were bituminous coal. More than a third of the Denver & Rio Grande's traffic is soft coal, and nearly the same proportion of the Colorado & Southern's business is derived from the bituminous coal mines. The Missouri Pacific is also a heavy coal carrier, nearly one-quarter of its 9,000,000 tons of freight being soft coal.

Statistics covering a dozen or more roads operating in various parts of the Central and Far West throw interesting light on the importance of bituminous coal as a source of revenue to the country's railroads. The table below shows the total traffic and the bituminous coal traffic of a number of railroads and the percentage which bituminous coal bears to the total freight business of these companies:

BITUMINOUS COAL TRAFFIC.

	Bituminous Coal, Tons.	Total Traffic, Tons.	Perc't'ge Bit. to Total.
Penn. R. R.	49,130,949	156,533,351	31.38
Hocking Valley	4,581,129	6,977,153	65.36
Chi., Mil. & St. P.	2,478,150	23,303,903	10.61
Chi. R. I. & Pac.	2,893,037	13,515,367	21.41
Minn. & St. Louis	229,161	1,967,599	11.64
A., T. & Santa Fe	1,908,070	12,894,347	14.79
Col. & Southern	1,401,122	4,306,563	32.53
Denver & Rio G.	2,399,061	7,166,838	33.47
Fort W. & D. City	378,815	1,033,271	36.67
Kan. City South	519,432	2,472,811	20.99
Missouri Pacific	2,190,210	9,062,340	24.2
St. Louis & San F.	10,178,969	22,187,068	45.88
Southern Pacific	419,762	19,360,730	2.17
Texas & Pacific	369,965	4,156,701	8.87

It will be seen from this table that even in the cases of some of the roads which are included in the general class of grain roads, such, for instance, as the Minneapolis & St. Louis, coal is an important source of revenue.

Pennsylvania heads the list of all the coal-producing States, but in many other parts of the country even outside of the territory commonly spoken of as the soft-coal fields the production of bituminous coal is very large. The parts of the country in which soft coal is mined and the relative importance of the various sections of the country as coal producers are indicated in the following list, which gives the production of bituminous coal for 1903:

BITUMINOUS COAL PRODUCTION.

	Tons.
Pennsylvania	92,068,909
Ohio	22,176,878
Total Middle States	144,766,685
Illinois	32,997,414
Colorado	6,590,592
Wyoming	4,136,655
Total Central and Western States	70,394,648
Washington	2,851,137
Total Pacific States	4,531,693
Alabama	10,405,646
Total Southern States	32,196,816
Total for country	252,389,837

The 6,590,592 tons produced in Colorado offer an explanation of the heavy movement of soft coal on the Colorado & Southern and the Denver & Rio Grande Road. Wyoming's production of over 4,000,000 tons throws light on the origin of the coal traffic of the roads serving the Northwest.

Saturday's announcement that the independent soft coal operators in the Pittsburg district had decided to follow the lead of the Pittsburg Coal Company and operate their mines under the 1903 scale of wages lessens the importance of the present bituminous strike. The 92,000,000 tons of soft coal mined in Western Pennsylvania represent more than one-third of the soft coal output of the country, and as conditions similar to those existing in Western Pennsylvania apply to a greater or less extent to Ohio and other States further West, it is evident that the supply of soft coal is in no wise threatened, as was the supply of anthracite by the strike of 1902.

Any consideration of the effects of a coal strike on the railroads of the country must take account of the fact that past experience has shown that the railroads are likely, upon the resumption of work at the mines, to recover rapidly from the losses resulting from a coal strike. Such was the record in the case of the anthracite roads after the prolonged strike in 1902. At the same time the railroads are careful to protect themselves by cutting down expenses to the fullest extent possible during a cessation of work by the coal miners, whose idleness necessarily reduces by a very large percentage the freight business of the railroads.

The figures given above show that the closing down of the soft coal mines or of any considerable portion of them must necessarily be a matter of considerable concern to the railroads, not only because of the increased difficulty and cost of operation during the period of a coal strike, but because of the actual loss of business which such strikes cause.
